that the Company owes at the present moment from £15,000 to £20,000; whether other Companies besides the "Irish Exhibition in London" have been registered by the Board of Trade without the addition of the word "Limited;" whether any such Companies have been wound up; and whether inconvenience to creditors, arising from the omission of the word "Limited," has resulted; and, whether, to prevent similar misunderstandings, for the future, he will consider the advisability of introducing a short Bill to repeal Section 23 of the Companies' Act Amendment Act of 1867?

THE PRESIDENT (Sir MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH) (Bristol, W.): Yes, Sir; the objects of the Irish Exhibition in London, as disclosed in the Memorandum and Articles of Association, were certainly such as to bring it within the meaning of the section referred to by the hon. Member. The prospectus of the Company was not before the Board of Trade, nor has the Department any cognizance of its financial position. Several other Companies besides the Irish Exhibition in London have been registered without the addition of the word "Limited;" but the Board of Trade have no knowledge of the winding up of any such Companies, nor are they aware of any cases where inconvenience to creditors has arisen from the omission of the word "Limited." Many licences under the section are applied for in the course of the year. The question of the amendment of all the Companies Acts is now under consideration, and the point referred to shall be borne in mind.

POST OFFICE—FORWARDING RE-ADDRESSED LETTERS.

MR. ATKINSON (Boston) had the following Question on the Paper:—To ask the Postmaster General, If he will reciprocate the conduct of Foreign Postal Authorities, by allowing paid letters of all kinds to follow the addresses in the United Kingdom without further charge; if he will cause the many communications on public business which are addressed to Members of Parliament at the House of Commons to be re-addressed and delivered without further charge for postage; and, if he will cause the sums due from right hon. Members of the House for arrears of postage on re-addressed letters to be collected, so that all Members of the House may have equal treatment in this respect?

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. RAIKES (Cambridge University)): This Question has been on the Paper six or seven times, and it is desirable to answer it. As regards ordinary letters passing through the post from place to place in this country, I am unable to see any reason why they should escape the ordinary postal rate when re-directed and transmitted a second time to a different address. The second service entails on the Department at least as great, if not greater, trouble than the first. Letters from abroad, in similar cases, are relieved from a second charge by the Rules of the Postal Union. Several years have elapsed since Members of this House renounced the exceptional privilege of franking. I do not think it desirable to re-establish this in any form; and I do not believe that the majority of Members of this House desire to receive more favourable treatment for their correspondence than that accorded to their constituents. I am not aware of any case in which any Member of this House has successfully evaded the surcharge upon re-directed letters or papers; but if the hon. Member will supply me with any instance of this, I will inquire into it, and take steps to prevent the recurrence of any such evasion.

RIOTS, &c. (IRELAND)—THE MAYOR OF CORK.

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether his attention has been directed to a prosecution of several policemen by the Mayor of Cork, when it was given in evidence that the Mayor was surrounded and prevented from proceeding by policemen with drawn swords and fixed bayonets, and that, having explained that he was the Mayor of Cork, was answered by the police—"I don't care to the devil who who you are;" whether, at the order of District Inspector Pearson, the Mayor was subsequently permitted to pass, but was again stopped at North Gate Bridge and treated by the police with considerable violence; whether it was sworn that cordons of police were, upon the occasion referred to, stationed at various points in the City of Cork, preventing by force of arms the citizens of Cork proceeding on their lawful business; whether it is true, as stated in the Cork daily papers, that the magistrate, Sir D. V. O'Sullivan, who delivered judgment, said — "That, taking into consideration the serious consequences of a criminal conviction to Sergeant Kennedy, &c., the Bench had determined to dismiss the case;" and, whether, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, steps will be taken to prevent the recurrence of such scenes in future?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.): I am informed that two policemen, not several, as alleged in the Question, were prosecuted by the Mayor of Cork on the occasion referred to. The expression attributed to one of the police was neither heard by the District Inspector, who was in charge, nor was any complaint made to him in regard to it. The Mayor was encouraging the driver of his car to break through the body of police who were on duty. He was prevented by these men, who did not know him, as they had been drafted in from the county; but the District Inspector at once let him pass through. At North Gate Bridge some 14 cars arrived close after a police escort, and among them the Mayor's car. The Mayor was allowed to pass through. There were no men stationed anywhere to prevent the people passing on their ordinary business; but to prevent a procession of cars from following a prisoner and his escort. I have seen no authoritative report of the proceedings before the magistrates; but they dismissed the charges against both the policemen.

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, If he has seen the reports in the Cork papers of the prosecution by the Mayor of Cork of two police constables (Constable Booth and Sergeant Kennedy) for assault and obstruction, committed on the occasion of Father Kennedy being conveyed to Cork Gaol; is he aware that the Mayor was refused the names and numbers of the constables on duty at North Gate Bridge, where the alleged assault took place; and, whether the Constabulary authorities are justified in withholding the names or numbers of policemen charged with assault by the magistrate of the city?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.): The District Inspector of Constabulary reports that it is not the case that the Mayor of Cork was refused the names and numbers of the constables on duty at the place mentioned. He asked for the name of one constable, specifying simply his number. The District Inspector said that he did not know at the time what constable bore that number; but referred him to the County Inspector. Upon application to him the name was at once furnished. As a matter of fact, it was proved that the constable referred to was not on duty at North Gate Bridge.

ISLANDS OF THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC —TONGA—THE CURRENCY.

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid) asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether it is a fact that by Order of the Tongan Government only English coin is accepted in Tonga in payment of Customs and similar dues; whether this leaves the Chilian dollar available for all other purposes a legal tender at 3*s.*; whether, in consequence of the fact that this is more than the Chilian dollar can buy, the effect of the Tongan Order is to throw upon importers the whole cost of introducing the English coin required by the Tongan Government; whether it is true that this hardship falls exclusively on English merchants in consequence of Treasury Bonds, the only other legal tender for Customs, &c., being sold exclusively to Germans; and, whether a remonstrance will be addressed to the Tongan Government on this subject?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Sir JAMES FERGUSSON) (Manchester, N.E.): The latest intelligence showed that, on account of the inconvenience caused by the circulation at equal rates of two currencies of different standards of value, and I believe as an experimental measure, the Government of Tonga have declared that money paid in taxes will be received if in sterling coin at $8 for 32*s.*, and if in Chilian dollars at $9 for 36*s.* As regards paragraph 2, the Premier is reported not to have given a final decision. As to three, its statement would be correct if those in the two former were so. Four, I am unable to answer. Five, we have no recent information; and, without good ground for such action, Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake to offer decided advice in the matter.

PURCHASE OF LAND (IRELAND) ACT, 1885—SALE OF THE VERNER ESTATES.

MR. JASPER MORE (Shropshire, Ludlow) (for Mr. T. W. RUSSELL) (Tyrone, S.) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether it is true that the estates of the late Sir N. M. Verner, in Tyrone, Monaghan, and Armagh, have been sold to the tenants under the Land Purchase Act, a portion of last year's rent being included in the purchase money; whether, since the contract for sale was completed, the Trustee of the Estates has brought a large number of ejectments for arrears of rent against some of the tenants, and served summonses in the case of others, against whom ejectment decrees have already been obtained; and, whether such proceedings are in conformity with the provisions of the Land Purchase Act; and, if he will direct the attention of the Commissioners to the action of this Trustee?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.): The Land Commissioners report that no agreements for the sale of the estate named have been lodged in their Office, nor have they any knowledge of the ejectment proceedings referred to. I have received a letter this morning from the Trustee of the Estate; and I shall be glad to show it to the hon. Member if he desires to see it.

LAND ACT (IRELAND) 1870—REPAYMENT OF LOANS.

MR. JASPER MORE (Shropshire, Ludlow) (for Mr. LEA) (Londonderry, E.) asked the Secretary to the Treasury, If all purchasers under the Irish Land Act of 1870, who have applied for the extended time for the repayment of their loans allowed by the Land Act of last year, have been given the extra period permitted by that Act?

THE SECRETARY (Mr. JACKSON) (Leeds, N.): In a few cases where the extension of the term to the full period would have reduced the annuity payable for the remainder of the term to less than 4 per cent, the Treasury have made no concession as to extension of time. In certain cases outstanding where the borrowers were in arrear, an agreement has not yet been arrived at as to the instalment of arrears to be paid up before the benefits of the Act of last Session are extended to them.

THE TRUCK ACTS—ALLEGED BREACHES AT HARLESDEN.

MR. BRADLAUGH (Northampton) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he is aware that, so far back as July last, the Inspector of Factories had evidence of gross breaches of the Truck Act at Harlesden, by the payment of wage to brickmakers otherwise than in current coin of the realm; and, if he will state why no prosecution has taken place?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): Yes, Sir; I am aware that the Chief Inspector of Factories reported that the Truck Act had been infringed under the circumstances mentioned in the Question. The Report was referred to the Treasury Solicitor, with directions to prosecute if there was a reasonable prospect of obtaining a conviction. The Treasury Solicitor, after making very careful inquiries, advised that, in view of the difficulty of obtaining a conviction, it would not be expedient to undertake a prosecution. I have directed the Inspector to keep careful watch.

VACCINATION ACTS—CONVICTION OF ENOCH HARPER, AT HALESOWEN PETTY SESSIONS.

MR. CHANNING (Northampton, E.) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he is aware of the following facts:—That Enoch Harper, of Quinton, was convicted at Halesowen Petty Sessions, on March 13, 1888, of disobeying a vaccination order, dated January 3, 1888, and fined £1 and 9*s.* costs; that he pronounced the proceedings irregular, and ordered the fines to be remitted; that the conviction has never been quashed, and still stands on the records of the Court; that no fresh vaccination order has been issued as to the child in question; that, notwithstanding that the conviction is unquashed, and no fresh order has been issued, Enoch Harper was summoned again for disobedience to the vaccination order of January 3, and on June 19, 1888, fined £1 and 9*s.* costs; and, whether this second conviction for the same offence, without the issue of a fresh vaccination order, is illegal; and, if so, whether he will direct the fine and costs imposed on Enoch Harper on June 19 to be refunded to him?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): The facts are correctly stated in the Question. Whether or not a fresh vaccination order was necessary to make the second conviction good is a matter of law, which was not raised before the magistrates at the time, and upon which it is no part of my duty to express an opinion. Mr. Harper is evading the law; and as he can move to have the conviction quashed, if he is so advised, I see no reason calling upon me to interfere.

METROPOLITAN POLICE—REDUCTION OF INSPECTOR HILL.

MR. LAFONE (Southwark, Bermondsey) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If it is true that Mr. Hill, attached to the Bermondsey Division of the Metropolitan Police, M Division, has been reduced from first-class Inspector to the rank of sergeant; and if the sole reason assigned was the delay of a telegram for a few minutes through no fault of Mr. Hill's, although he was in charge at the time; and, if he can see his way to re-instating a deserving officer to the rank he has been deprived of?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): Inspector Hill has been reduced from the rank of first-class Inspector to that of sergeant for several grave derelictions of duty, the particulars of which I had better not mention publicly, but which I will give to my hon. Friend if he wishes. There is no ground, therefore, for re-instating that officer to the rank of which he has been properly deprived.

CUSTOMS (STATISTICAL OFFICE)—WITHHOLDING OF BACK PAY.

MR. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) asked the Secretary to the Treasury, Upon what ground the back pay authorized by a Treasury Minute of the 27th of October last, in favour of certain copyists in the Statistical Office, Customs, is withheld in the case of those copyists who have received bonuses; and, whether he will make arrangements for the payment of the money before Christmas?

THE SECRETARY (Mr. JACKSON) (Leeds, N.): Arrangements have been made by which the copyists can receive the money referred to on application.

POST OFFICE (SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT)—INCREASE OF STAFF.

MR. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) asked the Postmaster General, Whether his application for an increase of staff for the Savings Bank Department has been under the consideration of the Treasury for some months; whether, in consequence of the delay in arriving at the decision, the work of the Department is greatly in arrear; whether the work now performed on extra duty (exclusive of that necessary for the preparation of the annual balance sheet) can be entirely provided for by the introduction of the seven hours' scale; and, whether he will take immediate steps to relieve the officers of the Department from the performance of extra duty such as has been necessary during the last 12 months?

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. RAIKES) (Cambridge University): The hon. Member puts to me four Questions. To the first the answer is that the case is as stated; and to the second that, owing to the cordial co-operation of the staff, the work of the Department cannot be described as greatly in arrear, although no doubt it is not so forward as it was this time last year. How far the work now performed by extra duty can be provided for by the seven hours' scale is a question which is now engaging my careful attention, and that of the Treasury, and I am not yet prepared to express a positive opinion on the point. In the matter of extra duty no efforts shall be wanting on my part to procure the relief required.

ARMY—MR. FARINI'S MACHINE RIFLES.

COLONEL EYRE (Lincolnshire, Gainsborough) asked the Secretary of State for War, whether his attention has been called to a statement in The Field newspaper, of Saturday last, December 15, as to the penetration attained by a bullet, the invention of Mr. Farini, and to the machinery by which rifles can, without alteration, be converted into machine guns?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): The article will be referred for the observations of the Small Arms Committee; but I may say that the bore is the same as that of the new magazine rifle, and that the greatest velocity mentioned is less than that laid down as the standard for the new arm.

SOUTH AFRICA — MATABELELAND — THE CHIEF LOBENGULA.

MR. BAUMANN (Camberwell, Peckham) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, whether Lobengula's country is included in the British Protectorate in South Africa; and, if so, whether the Secretary of State has received information from the High Commissioner relative to a concession of all mineral rights in Matabeleland and Mashonaland to an English Company; whether such concession has been sanctioned by the High Commissioner; and, whether it is a fact that payment to the Chief Lobengula for this concession has been made by a large supply of arms and ammunition?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA (Sir JOHN GORST) (Chatham) (who replied) said, as has been frequently explained to the House during the present Session, the protectorate over part of Khama's territory, which is distinct from that of Lobengula, does not include the territory of the latter. The Secretary of State has been informed that a concession of the nature referred to has been granted to a Mr. Rudd. The High Commissioner has no power to sanction concessions granted by Lobengula, who is an independent King. It has been stated that £100 per month, in addition to a number of rifles, will be the consideration for the reported concession. On these points the Secretary of State is in communication with the High Commissioner.

FRANCE—POLL TAX AT THE FRENCH CHANNEL PORTS.

MR. LEGH (Lancashire, S.W., Newton) asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any communications have passed with the French Government respecting the additional Poll Tax about to be levied upon all persons entering and leaving the French Channel Ports?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Sir JAMES FERGUSSON) (Manchester, N.E.): No communication has passed with the French Government on this subject. We have, however, been informed, both by Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris and the Consul at Boulogne, of the fact of an increase having been made.

AFRICA (WEST COAST)—MAJOR MACDONALD'S MISSION IN THE NIGER DISTRICT.

MR. PICTON (Leicester) asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether he will lay upon the Table of the House the instructions given to Major Macdonald in regard to his Mission of Inquiry in the Niger District?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Sir JAMES FERGUSSON) (Manchester, N.E.): No instructions have yet been given; but they will be confidential, and I cannot undertake to present them.

In reply to Mr. LAFONE (Southwark, Bermondsey),

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON said, Major Macdonald would arrive at the river at the time it was at the proper height to ascend it.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888—AN EDITION IN THE WELSH LANGUAGE.

MR. T. E. ELLIS (Merionethshire) asked the President of the Local Government Board, Whether the request of all the Members of Parliament for Wales and Monmouthshire that the Local Government Act should be issued in Welsh will be granted; and, if so, how soon the Act will be published?

THE PRESIDENT (Mr. RITCHIE) (Tower Hamlets, St. George's), in reply, said, that he originally returned an unfavourable answer to the request that the Act should be translated into Welsh. Since then he had received deputations which consisted practically of the whole of the Representatives from Wales on both sides of the House, urging on him that this translation should be made and published, and stating they regarded it as an entirely exceptional case, and as not forming a precedent for anything of the kind in the future. Under these circumstances, he had come to the conclusion to have the Act translated into Welsh, and he hoped that no undue delay would take place in the matter.

LUNATIC ASYLUMS ACT—THE MEDICAL OFFICER OF THE RAINHILL ASYLUM, LANCASHIRE.

MR. HOYLE (Lancashire, S.E., Heywood) asked the President of the Local Government Board, If he is aware that a proposition to award a retiring pension of £800 a-year to the medical officer of the Lunatic Asylum, Rainhill, Lancashire, is to be considered at their next Court on the 26th instant; and, whether, in consideration of the impending transfer of the county asylums to the County Council, any representation can be made to the Justices by which the imposition of such a charge on the county rates may be deferred until the Council enters on its duties?

THE PRESIDENT (Mr. RITCHIE) (Tower Hamlets, St. George's): I have no information as to the proposition referred to. The Committee of Visitors of a lunatic asylum may, under the Lunatic Asylums Acts, award a superannuation allowance to any officer of the asylum who, from confirmed sickness, age, or infirmity, becomes incapable of executing his office in person, or who has been an officer in the asylum for not less than 15 years, and is not under 50 years of age. The allowance is not to exceed two-thirds of the salary payable at the time of retirement. No such allowance, however, can be charged on the county rates until the award has been confirmed by a Resolution of Quarter Sessions. The matter is not one in which the Local Government Board have any jurisdiction; and I cannot undertake to make any representations to the Justices as to the exercise of their statutory powers in the matter.

NAVY—THE ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE —CERTIFICATES.

MR. ROWNTREE (Scarborough) asked the First Lord of the Admiralty, If it would be practicable to include in the certificate of service granted to men of the Royal Naval Reserve who have served their full time an endorsement of character, as reported from time to time by the Drill Instructors, and similar to that given to seamen leaving the Royal Navy, in order to assist men of good character in obtaining employment ashore when no longer able, on account of age, to follow their calling at sea?

MR. ASHMEAD-BARTLETT (A LORD of the ADMIRALTY) (Sheffield, Ecclesall) (who replied) said: There is no objection, as far as the Admiralty is concerned; but it is a question for the Board of Trade, which issues the certificates to Royal Naval Reserve men, to decide whether it would be practicable; and the Admiralty have not had time to obtain the opinion of the Board of Trade upon this point.

ARMY—THE QUEEN'S REGULATIONS, SEC. 5, PAR. 76—MILITARY ATTACHES.

CAPTAIN SELWYN (Cambridge, Wisbeach) asked the Secretary of State for War, How many regimental officers are now serving in contravention of Section 5, Paragraph 76, of the Queen's Regulations for the Army; whether the Regulation in this paragraph applies to military attachés and to officers on the Staff of the Viceroy of India; and, if not, why these officers are allowed to be absent from their regiments for more than five or six years; how long have the military attachés at Paris and Berlin, and the military secretary to the Viceroy of India, been absent from their regiments; and, whether, after such absence, these officers are to be allowed to return and in a short time command their regiments?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): There are now seven officers serving on the personal Staff of General Officers who have exceeded the period of Staff service laid down in the Queen's Regulations; but in every case their retention of office has been advisedly sanctioned. The Rule does not apply to military attachés who hold their appointments for a period of five years, subject to renewal if considered desirable for the good of the Service. The Staff of the Viceroy of India and of Colonial Governors are appointed for six years. The military attaché at Paris has been absent from his regiment since January 1, 1877. During that time he has held several appointments with advantage to the State, and has taken a distinguished part in two campaigns. The military attaché at Berlin has been continuously absent from his regiment since January, 1879. He also has served with distinction during that period in two campaigns. His second period of service shortly expires, and he is to rejoin his battalion as second in command. The military secretary to the Viceroy of India has held positions on the personal Staff of successive Viceroys at their particular request since December, 1875. While serving on the Staff he has taken part in three campaigns, in one of which he earned the Victoria Cross.

RAILWAYS — ACCIDENT AT SYSTON, MIDLAND RAILWAY—MAJOR MARINDIN'S REPORT.

MR. BRADLAUGH (Northampton) (for Mr. CHANNING) (Northampton, E.) asked the President of the Board of Trade, Whether he has considered the Report of Major Marindin on the fatal accident to platelayers near Syston, on the Midland Railway; whether it appears from that Report that such Rules of the Midland Company as affect the platelayers refer to the protection of the trains, and not to the protection of the platelayers themselves; whether in the recorded Regulations for foggy weather, issued last September by the London and North Western Railway, there are no Rules for the special protection of platelayers in their work; and, whether, having regard to the frequent loss of life, he will cause a Board of Trade Circular to be issued to all the Companies, drawing attention to Major Marindin's Report, and especially to his comments on the absence of—

"Rules providing for men being posted out to protect gangs at ordinary work on curves or other places where the view of the line is restricted, or for their protection by other means;"

and to his recommendation that—

"Additions should be made to the Rules, defining accurately the precautions which should be taken for the safety of men working upon the line . . . . and making it clear that during fogs no work which can possibly be avoided is to be carried on upon any part of the line where the men will be in danger?"

THE PRESIDENT (Sir MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH) (Bristol, W.): Yes, Sir; I have seen the Report referred to, and the facts disclosed in that Report are as stated by the hon. Member. The Board of Trade have no information as to Rules issued by the London and North-Western Railway Company last September; but a Circular to the Companies has been issued calling attention to the Report on the accident in question and the recommendations made therein.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION—RETURN OF JUDICIAL RENTS.

MR. E. SPENCER (West Bromwich) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether it would be possible for the Irish Land Commissioners to publish the temporary adjustments of judicial rents since the passing of the Act of 1877, at a date prior to Christmas?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.): The Land Commissioners hope to be able to publish the Schedule referred to on the 23rd of this month.

LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART—THE SOUTH KENSINGTON COLLECTIONS.

SIR LYON PLAYFAIR (Leeds, S.) asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether he can now give the names of the Committee appointed to inquire into the condition of the South Kensington Collections; and, whether he will direct the attention of the Committee to the Report and Evidence of the Duke of Devonshire's Commission, so far as it relates to this subject, and also the Reports and Evidence of subsequent Committees which Government have, from time to time, appointed without acting upon their recommendations?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square) (who replied) said: I am still in communication with several of the gentlemen whom it is proposed to put on the Committee, consequently I cannot as yet state the names. With regard to the Reports of previous Commissions or Committees, the attitude of the Government was shown in an answer given by the First Lord of the Treasury in the House on the 26th of last month. The Duke of Devonshire's Commission, to which the hon. Member refers, reported in 1874 that it was desirable that the Scientific Collections should be subjected to a critical revision, with a view to restricting them to such objects as are of National interest or utility. Similarly, the Committees which sat in 1883, whose Reports were adopted by Sir Frederick Bramwell's Committee in 1885, held that the Scientific Collections might be weeded with advantage. Sir Frederick Bramwell's Committee omitted to deal specifically with this question; and for this reason my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade (Sir Michael Hicks-Beach), who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, decided in 1885 that nothing could be done until the Collections had been thoroughly sifted by some independent authority. It is this object which the new Committee is intended to effect.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.) asked whether there was to be any Representative of Ireland on this Committee?

MR. GOSCHEN said, that the suggestion had not been made to the First Lord of the Treasury. The Committee was to be selected, not with a view to the representation of Parliamentary Parties or separate Nationalities, but to collect the best men to judge of scientific and artistic objects.

MR. SEXTON thought that it was inexpedient that Ireland should be entirely unrepresented.

CIVIL ESTABLISHMENTS—REPORT OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION.

MR. KELLY (Camberwell, N.) asked the First Lord of the Treasury, If he is able to state when effect will be given to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Civil Establishments; and, whether any Order in Council dealing with such recommendations will be published before the ensuing Session?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square) (who replied) said: The recommendations of the Royal Commission on Civil Establishments are receiving our careful consideration. I need scarcely say that great caution is necessary in devising new Regulations for a large Body like the Civil Service, discharging duties of such varied character. We have directed that, pending final orders on the subject, a Civil servant is not to accept a Directorship of a public Company. In like manner we have directed that no fresh grants of duty pay are to be made. We are making arrangements under which all persons under the age of 60 applying to retire from the Public Service will be subjected to the examination of a Government medical officer. We intend, at the beginning of next Session, to introduce a Bill amending the Superannuation Act in the direction of some of the recommendations of the Royal Commission.

PUBLIC HEALTH—THE CONGRESS OF SANITARY INSPECTORS—RECOGNITION OF SANITARY SERVICE.

SIR GUYER HUNTER (Hackney, Central) asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Whether any acceptance will be accorded to the Memorial of the Congress of Sanitary Inspectors of June last, submitting the expediency of the adoption of one presented from the late Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., and the Heads of Sanitary Institutions, praying that the like recognition may be given to distinguished sanitary service in saving life that is given to distinguished naval and military service?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square) (who replied) said: The hon. Member does not state in his Question to whom the Memorial referred to was addressed; and, though I have made inquiries on the subject, I have as yet been unable to trace it, and am not in a position, therefore, to give any information on the subject.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—FATAL ACCIDENTS IN MINES.

MR. BRADLAUGH (Northampton) asked, Whether the Government would give instructions for the preparation of a Return showing the number of fatal accidents in mines and factories during the seven years before and the seven years after the passing of the Employers' Liability Act?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.), in reply, said, he had some time ago directed the preparation of such a Return.

EGYPT—SUAKIN—DEFEAT OF THE DERVISHES.

MR. HERMON-HODGE (Lancashire, Accrington): I wish to ask the Secretary of State for War, Whether he can confirm the news in the public Press, to the effect that the forces under General Grenfell have fought a successful engagement; and whether he can place the House in possession of fuller information on the subject?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): We received a telegram this morning from General Grenfell, dated from Suakin at 8.30 this morning, which curiously, making allowance for difference of time, reached this country at 7.30 a.m. It says—

"Attacked trenches 7 a.m. this morning, Black Brigade storming them with great gallantry. Enemy fought desperately, losing very heavily. We captured both their guns. King's Own Borderers and Welsh punished enemy severely by their excellent volley firing. Navy assisted greatly by machine gun fire and 64-pounder. Enemy in full retreat on Hasheen and Handoub."

And in a later telegram he gives further information, which I shall summarize. He estimates the dervish loss at 400. The 20th Hussars charged the dervish cavalry very brilliantly. Our loss, four privates of the 20th Hussars killed; Lieutenant Brown, Royal Irish Rifles, and Lieutenant David, of the Marines, and a few privates, whose names are given, slightly wounded. Among the Egyptian troops a sergeant and 17 men wounded, and 13 others received slight wounds, but are still with their regiments. The Egyptian troops seem to have amply justified the confidence placed in them by General Grenfell.

AFRICA (EAST COAST)—EXECUTIONS AT ZANZIBAR.

MR. BUCHANAN (Edinburgh, W.) asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether he had received any information as to the news in to-day's papers as to the executions at Zanzibar, and the intention of the Sultan to continue those operations; and, whether he had communicated with the British Consul with a view to stop them?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Sir JAMES FERGUSSON) (Manchester, N.E.): Information was received yesterday by telegraph that several executions of a barbarous character had taken place at Zanzibar, and that others were impending. Her Majesty's Consul General stated that he had remonstrated with the Sultan. He has to-day reported that four more executions had taken place. Instructions have been sent to Colonel Euan Smith directing him to repeat his remonstrances; to protest in the strongest terms against the course on which the Sultan has entered; to invite the co-operation of his colleagues; and to warn him of the disastrous consequences to himself that are likely to ensue.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (IRELAND) BILL.

In reply to The LORD MAYOR of DUBLIN (Mr. Sexton) (Belfast, W.),

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square) said, that the Government did not intend to proceed with this Bill.

EVICTIONS (IRELAND)—RETURN OF EVICTIONS AND COERCION PROSECUTIONS ON THE CLANRICARDE ESTATE.

MR. SHAW LEFEVRE (Bradford, Central) asked, Whether the Government had any objection to granting a Return of Evictions and Coercion Prosecutions on the Clanricarde Estate?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.), in reply, said, he was not prepared to grant the Return at present; but he would consider the matter. It would require very long and difficult inquiries to furnish such a Return.

IRELAND—LAND PURCHASE RETURNS.

MR. JOHN MORLEY (Newcastle-upon-Tyne) asked the Chief Secretary for Ireland, with reference to the Return which was asked for by the hon. Member for Stepney (Mr. Wootton Isaacson), Whether that Return was intended as a substitute for the much fuller Return on Land Purchase which he (Mr. John Morley) had proposed?

THE CHIEF SECRETARY (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.), in reply, said, the right hon. Gedtleman seemed under a misapprehension. The Government would not consent to the Return asked for by the hon. Member.

MR. JOHN MORLEY asked, if the fuller Return which he himself had previously proposed would be granted?

MR. A. J. BALFOUR said, he thought the Land Commissioners would have no difficulty in giving the Return substantially in the form asked for by the right hon. Gentleman.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(Mr. Courtney, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Jackson.)

SECOND READING.

Order for Second Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read a second time."

MR. BRADLAUGH (Northampton) said, he desired to call attention to the construction by the Government of the Statute of Edward III. c. 34, about persons finding security. He would point out that the words which the Home Secretary quoted from Dalton and Hawkins, as being literally construed by the Courts, only applied to the case of a riot or riotous proceeding. There had been no case in England during the last 60 years in which a person had been compelled to give sureties for his good behaviour, except on the allegation of acts tending to a breach of the peace, or the apprehension that a breach of the peace might be committed. He had had no opportunity of making himself acquainted with the Irish practice, but he had looked into Macnally. Many curious Statutes besides that of Edward III. might be found in Macnally, all of which were finally swept away by the Act of Geo., as the 10 & 11 Charles I., c. 16, which enacts—

"That young gentlemen of this Kingdom"—that is, Ireland—"who will not apply themselves to labour, but live idly and inordinately, having no means of their own, or from their kindred, who walk about with greyhounds, cosher or cess upon the country or exact drink or money, the Justices may bind to their good behaviour, and commit them to gaol, and bind them to their loyalty and allegiance with sureties."

And by 6 Anne, c. 11—

"All loose, idle vagrants, and such as pretend to be Irish gentlemen, and will not work or betake themselves to any honest trade or livelihood, but wander about demanding victuals, and coshering from house to house amongst their fosterers, followers, and others; and also loose persons of infamous lives and characters, shall be sent to gaol unless they give security for their good behaviour."

The English translation of 34 Edward III. in several respects did not agree with the Norman-French, to which he must refer. The Chief Secretary said the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland decided that this Statute gave power to the Justices to call upon persons who were not of good fame to give security, and in default to commit them to prison. His contention was that the Statute did not authorize them to do this. A reference to the Norman-French of the Statute itself showed that it did nothing of the kind, for it instructed the Justices to prendre de touz ceux qi sont de bone fame security for their behaviour. The negative had been inserted by the English translators, who had misconceived the object of the Statute, and had been guilty of very bad translation. The Home Secretary and the Irish lawyers ought, however, to have been warned by the fact that the English versions contained a note saying that qi sont of the actual text, in certain MSS. and old printed copies, read qi ne sont. In the Norman-French there was no negative. The Statute in reality directed the Justices after having arrested the rioters, barrators, and persons who had been pillors and robbers in parts beyond the seas to put them in prison; but if any of them were found to be of good fame they were to be liberated on giving sureties, and the others—that is, those who were not of such good fame, were to be duly punished. The clause must be read as a whole; power was given to arrest all the persons mentioned. Those of good fame might be released on giving sufficient sureties, and les auts duement punir. There was no separate enactment authorizing the taking sureties from those not of good fame, and to read the "not" which stood within brackets into the original text made it ridiculous. He believed the present Government was not the only offender, but that its Predecessors had also perverted the real meaning of the Statute. Possibly the point had never been raised before the Queen's Bench Division in Ireland, nor that as to the repealing effect of the 5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 1. It was curious that neither in the chronological index nor in the revised Statutes was there any note that the part of 34 Edward III. relating to vagabonds had been repealed. There was, of course, no appeal in criminal cases, but the matter could be raised by error in law, and if he had been one of the parties concerned he would have carried it to the highest Court of Appeal. He thought it was unfair for the Government to put into prison under the disputable, obsolete, and possibly repealed provisions of the Act of Edward III. poor and ignorant men who might not have the money to get the point argued before the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords.

MR. S. SMITH (Flintshire) said, he desired to call attention to the great grievances now existing in Wales. He was sorry to have to state that Wales at the present time was literally simmering with discontent. He did not think the House realized the state of feeling now existing in the Principality. There had been for several years an almost entire neglect of Welsh questions in the House of Commons. As a matter of fact, according to the Rules of the House, the Welsh Members scarcely ever had an opportunity of raising a discussion upon those questions. He would refer particularly to the tithe question, with which they were all familiar. As Representatives of Wales they had done their utmost to dissuade the people from anything in the nature of violence. They had urged them to use only Constitutional means, but they could not ignore the fact that the state of feeling in Wales was very disturbed.

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! Of course the limits of discussion are very wide on these occasions, but I do not know how the hon. Member proposes to connect this subject with the Bill before the House. The Appropriation Bill is subject to the same Rules which affect other Bills, and the point to be discussed must be somewhat relevant to the Bill.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth) asked, whether it was competent for anyone to move any sort of Amendment to the second reading of the Appropriation Bill?

MR. SPEAKER said, that it had not been customary, but since 1870 Amendments had repeatedly been moved.

MR. S. SMITH asked, whether the employment of military in the collection of tithes in Wales would bring the question within the purview of the Appropriation Bill?

MR. SPEAKER said, that the action of any Department of the Government would bring it within the purview of the Bill. He was not aware from the opening of the hon. Gentleman's speech that he was going to refer to the action of the military.

MR. S. SMITH said, that it had been thought necessary several times to call out the military to recover payment of tithes, and that was a most serious state of things. It showed an immense amount of repugnance to tithes, and the necessity, by wise and conciliatory legislation, of putting an end to the present state of things. He thought he might also fairly call attention to the failure of the House to redeem the pledges which had been given with respect to intermediate education in Wales. The feeling in Wales was very strong on that subject. He trusted the Government would give an early opportunity for discussing the question. The Land Question also excited a great deal of feeling in that country. In the town of Buckley, in Flintshire, a large number of small occupiers had built cottages on common land in the full belief that they would be free from the payment of rent except common rent. But of late a right had been claimed over them by the lord of the manor. A law ought to be passed to prevent the appropriation by others of the property of industrious men, as Parliament had done in the case of Ireland. There was another grievance, which was connected with the appointment of Welsh magistrates. In almost every part of Wales the magistrates were separated in sentiment from the people. That was owing to the fact that their appointment depended entirely on the discretion of a few individuals. A note from the Lord Chancellor would be sufficient to induce them to act more justly. The Welsh were a very patient, law-abiding people, but it was quite possible that patience might be too much abused.

DR. CLARK (Caithness) said, that it was time for the Government to make up their minds as to what they would do with regard to Bechuanaland and Zululand. Were they going to hand over Bechuanaland to the Cape Colony; if not, on what conditions were they going to keep it? He was told that the Cape Colony had been asked to take over Bechuanaland; that they had demanded £50,000 a-year as a subsidy to induce them to do so; and that the Government were willing to give a smaller sum. The condition of the Colony was deplorable. In the capital there was not a single school for white children, who were therefore brought up without education. In the whole Colony there were only two schools, which were kept by missionaries. Was that a fit state of things for a British Colony? Again, in the capital there was not a single surgeon, and in the gaol there was gaol fever, and the prisoners were dying of it. In 1866 the income of the Colony was £6,700, while the expenditure was £110,000, of which the British taxpayer had to find £102,000. The reason why so much money was spent was because of the preposterous Police Force, upon which about £100,000 was spent; the fact being that it was a force not of police, but of soldiers. As Bechuanaland was a British Colony, why not send out there a couple of companies, whom you would pay 1*s.* a-day per head, instead of, as at present, paying 6*s.* a-head? If we were going to keep the country as a Colony, we must spend money on it. We had taken the worst part of the country—a barren and waterless region—while the Northern portion of the territory was well watered and fertile. There was no doubt that Europeans aud white men would go on extending over the country from the North, and that black men would continue to come from the South. Something should be done to regulate these two ways; and the question was, at whose expense and under whose authority was it to be done? Until now the practice had been to do all these things at the expense of the Imperial Government; but if the Government were going to develop the Crown Colonies, they should wait until those Colonies repaid the money which the Imperial Government had spent on them before they handed them over. During the last five years we had spent £1,000,000 on Bechuanaland, and had been spending £100,000 on the country ever since. Why should we do this, and then hand the country over to the Cape Colony? The wiser course would be to allow the Cape Colony to do all these things itself. The Cape Colony offered to take over the territory now called Bechuanaland; but the Imperial Government refused to sanction this, and took the country over itself. Bechuanaland was a very healthy country, and it would be much better to have the cheap soldiers of Europe there—men who could be hired for 1*s.* a-day—than dear Colonial soldiers. Another question was that of Zululand. While the Zulus were satisfied with the arrangements made regarding the boundary, we foolishly annexed their country without getting the sanction of the Zulu King and the Zulu Chiefs. But it was inevitable that Natal would get Zululand; and the only solution of the difficulty would be to annex Zululand to Natal, making Natal responsible for the government of the country. The Colonial Secretary promised some time ago to examine into the causes that brought about the late war, and the man who was responsible for that war was the man who had appointed the Commissioner to try the prisoners. The trials had been postponed until the end of January; but he had no doubt the Court would bring in a verdict of "Guilty" against the King and his uncles.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL (Kirkcaldy, &c.) said, that although he could not move the Amendment of which he had given Notice, no one would assert that there had been sufficient discussion on the Diplomatic and Colonial Votes, which, at the suggestion of the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Wolverhampton (Mr. Henry H. Fowler), were squeezed into one night. That did not allow adequate discussion of the great questions which arose on the Votes. He expressed the opinion that the British Constitution was a used-up force, which required to be re-modelled from top to bottom; but he only wished to draw attention to one part of the rusty old machine—namely, that part which enabled the Executive Government to carry through these great territorial questions without the sanction or control of Parliament. In these days there seemed to be a revival of the theory of "Divine right" on the part of the Executive Government for the time being, by which the Executive Government in the name of the Crown exercised an absolutely despotic power in regard to questions of peace or war and the acquisition or disposal of territories, and the only power that House had of re straining the Executive Government was the power of the purse. The course followed in the present Session, however, of squeezing the Diplomatic and Colonial Estimates into one night, had practically taken away that sole remaining power from the House of Commons. The Government were believed to have extended a British Protectorate over the territory of Brunei and Sarawak, and he asked by what Parliamentary sanction that obligation had been imposed on the people of this country? He believed he was correct in saying that they had scarcely any knowledge of what had been done. He proposed to call attention to a list of cases in which the power referred to had been exercised, or to some extent exercised, by Her Majesty's Government without the sanction of Parliament. The first case was that of Western Australia, in connection with which Her Majesty's Government, he believed, were regulated by Statute; but he gathered that, without consulting Parliament, and almost unknown to the people of this country, Her Majesty's Government had gone a great length in negotiating with the Colonists of Western Australia with a view to the transfer of that great territory to a responsible Government. They were told that the Northern—that was to say the hot—portion of this territory was to be reserved, but that the temperate portion, which would be invaluable for colonization purposes, was to be given away. He protested against the giving away in this manner of enormous territory to which our own poor people, against whom in these days the door was being shut in so many quarters of the globe, might be emigrated and colonized. This was pre-eminently a case in which the Government ought to have gone so far without consulting the country. In the case of New Guinea, again, there had been practically a double operation—an annexation and an alienation. The country had been made a British Colony, and that British Colony had at the same time been practically handed over to colonization. He need only mention the acquisition of North Borneo and the Malay States. Then there was the great question of Bechuanaland and the enormous extension of "British influence" up to the Zambesi River. It was all very well to say there had only been an extension of "British influence," but they all knew that in these matters a Protectorate followed to-morrow and annexation the day after. Next came the burning question of East Africa, where we had not only established a great British Company, but had also committed ourselves to the establishment of a great German Company. Having read the Charter of the British East African Company, his impression was that it not only gave that Company the right to acquire by the best means in their power territory extending from the coast of Zanzibar up to the Victoria Nyanza, but would also enable them to acquire the territory in which the African Lakes Company, a cognate Company, was now carrying on war and annex that also. The next annexation to which he would allude, made without the consent of Parliament, was one which was only incubating at the present moment—he referred to the Oil River Territory. Then there was the mission to establish British influence in the sources of the Niger, and before Parliament again met they might hear of a Soudan Company being established to rule over the Soudan. Her Majesty's Government ought to give the House some information before Parliament separated as to the position they intended to assume with regard to this question. Now that our troops had raised the siege of Suakin, he hoped the Government would say what they were going to do next, and give a pledge that the military operations should not be carried to any considerable distance into the Soudan. He should also like to know on whom the discretion would rest as to the present conduct of operations? He begged to move his Amendment.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth), in seconding the Amendment, said, that this was probably the last occasion on which he would have an opportunity of saying a word regarding the events occurring around Suakin. He felt very strongly on this question; but he was afraid that his views would not receive much sympathy from the House as at present constituted. He protested with all the strength in his power against the senseless and shameless slaughter of Arabs, the news of which had disgraced the country that morning. The taking of the lives of any set of men without due care, without due precaution, without due investigation, was to his mind one of the most shameful things that any individual or nation could do. The slaughter was shameless because the House had no clear indication from any authority or from the Government as to what was to follow. What was the object of all this slaughter? What was the ultimate result to be? It reflected greatly on the good name of this country that those attacks should be made without greater care being taken, without greater deliberation, without full discussion, and after all the facts had been laid before the House. "When the life of man is in debate, no time can be too long, no pains too great." What had the Arabs who were slaughtered that morning done? For a long time they had been cruelly oppressed by, he supposed, the worst Government the world had ever seen—the old Egyptian Government. For some time past they had been, in the words of the late Prime Minister, "rightly struggling to be free." It might be said in excuse for the slaughter that the Arabs were attacking Suakin. He admitted that there was some force in the reason; but he asked the House to look at the situation. The town belonged to the Arabs, not to us. [Laughter.] Yes; the town belonged to the inhabitants of the district just as much as Liverpool belonged to Englishmen. If the French took Liverpool we should consider it a noble act to strive and take it back. Would it not be well sometimes to consider the right and the wrong before indulging in these things? The House might recollect that a deputation came to the noble Lord the Member for Rossendale (the Marquess of Hartington) about the abandonment of Candahar. The noble Lord then said one of the best things he ever said. The deputation talked about the use that Candahar would be to us for trade and about British prestige, and the noble Lord said—"The first thing to consider is, what right have we to be there?" That was a question with regard to Suakin which it would be rather difficult for the Government to answer. He hoped that the old Slave Trade argument would not be trotted out again, for, if anything had been proved by recent debates, it was that that was an old bogey, and that we had done no good in our attempts to stop the Slave Trade. On the contrary, we had done more harm than good, and all our action had only caused it to be carried on in a more cruel way than before. Then it might be said that Suakin was held for the Egyptian Government; but Lord Salisbury had declared that it was of no use to them, and the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Mid Lothian had said the same thing. Could the House find any other two questions upon which those two statesmen agreed? Surely it was strong evidence that the town was of no use to the Egyptian Government when it was found that the Leaders of both Parties agreed to this effect. Another argument which would be used was that our prestige would suffer if we gave the town up; but surely the brave man ought to be able to say that he was wrong; it was only the coward who declared that he was right in the face of all evidence to the contrary. It really came to this—we were defending a town to which we had no right against the people with whom we had no quarrel, and for objects which no one was able to explain. Then it was said that we must teach the Arabs that we were their masters. That was the argument of Cain in regard to Abel. ["No, no!"] Yes; Cain said he must be the master of Abel, and he killed him. They talked about the cruel executions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, but they had that morning, by their troops, by their black men, and by the Egyptian Army, contrived to kill 400 people who were defending their own country; with their machinery of murder, their machine guns, they had mowed them down wholesale. He did not think anyone could say that that was a thing of which this nation could be proud. Members were going home to keep Christmas. He wondered how hon. Gentlemen who were responsible for this wholesale murder would feel, keeping their Christmas festival. Let them think of the men who had been killed, and of the other wretched men who were at that moment dying on the desert, and then go to their churches and talk about peace and goodwill to men. No doubt this would be very popular in the country. They would have pœans of praise from the mob and brilliant articles from able editors who urged people to fight but did not go themselves, and thanksgivings in the churches. But if this slaughter were the outcome of Christianity and civilization, then Christianity was a sham, and civilization was a mockery, a delusion, and a snare. He wished the noble Lord the Member for South Paddington (Lord Randolph Churchill) had been present. He honoured the noble Lord for the course he had taken. They might find fault with him for inconsistency in some matters, but all through this business he had been true as steel, and in favour of oppressed Nationalities against our cruel policy of shooting men down for defending their own country. Two years ago the noble Lord, in an interesting speech on our warlike expenditure, asked whether a policy would always be adopted that was opposed to the peace-loving instincts of a democratic people? He (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) feared that the people were not educated enough on these questions; they were slow to understand them; but if they did endorse these continual attacks on an oppressed people, then he said they were one of the most degraded democracies that had ever obtained political power, and that they would deserve to suffer the same oppressions themselves. It was an extraordinary position, and he felt as if they had gone back six years and he was protesting against the bombardment of Alexandria. But then they had had no warning. Now, they had done the same thing over and over again; £30,000,000 sterling had been spent in these senseless wars; the characters of most of their statesmen at home had been damaged, and they had got into difficulties with Continental nations; and to start the thing again now, especially at the season of Christmas, when peace and goodwill should prevail, was a sort of madness most discreditable to this country. He made that protest—he could do no more. He seconded the Amendment by way of protest against this hideous drama, in order that some information might be given before they were launched into further horrors, so that the people might form their judgment before other hideous and horrible things were done in their name.

Amendment proposed,

To leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "this House is unwilling to read this Bill a second time till it has better information of the intentions of Her Majesty's Government in regard to the Soudan."—(Sir George Campbell.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

Sir Wilfrid Lawson

Sir RICHARD TEMPLE (Worcester, Evesham) said, he rose at once, and at a moment's notice, to reply to the speech of the hon. Member for the Cockermouth Division of Cumberland (Sir Wilfrid Lawson), whose speech reminded him of St. Simeon Stylites sitting on his column preaching to the unregenerate people on that side of the House. The hon. Baronet seemed to be the apostle of the doctrine of universal scuttle, of national self-abasement, with self-effacement, and of political abnegation. He should leave him in the enjoyment of that doctrine. What did the hon. Baronet say in his extraordinary speech? He said that the military operations were undertaken without any previous discussion in Parliament. [Sir Wilfrid Lawson: Without sufficient discussion.] Now, he appealed to the House whether this subject as to Suakin had not been discussed threadbare? Then the hon. Baronet asked, with what object were the operations undertaken? Was it necessary to remind him that the officially declared object was the defence of Suakin? That fully; but nothing beyond that—no operations whatever from the far-off interior. A policy at Suakin was wholly apart from any policy respecting the Soudan. At present the British policy was to leave the Soudan to itself. The Arabs had attacked that town, which was in possession of an Egyptian garrison under British authority; they had shelled the town, taken the lives of Egyptian soldiers and inhabitants, run up the price of provisions, narrowed employment, and, in fact, had threatened the garrison of the town with extermination, and had done this without any provocation whatever. All this had been done for the single purpose of carrying on the Slave Trade. The hon. Baronet said these Arabs had suffered from Egyptian domination. They were, no doubt, for a long time under Egyptian authority, but that authority was of the lightest and most shadowy description. However, whatever shadow there ever was of Egyptian supremacy over them had undoubtedly disappeared for the last three or four years, and they had, therefore, no justification or reason whatever for attacking Suakin. Then the hon. Baronet said the town was theirs.

Now, Suakin was not, and never had been theirs, and they had never had anything whatever to do with the place. Suakin belonged to the Egyptian Government and the people of Egypt. The Arabs engaged in the operations were dwellers in a distant country, in the Upper Valley of the Nile. They crossed a broad desert to attack a town which had belonged to Egypt for 50 years.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON said, what he maintained was that the dervishes came to help the inhabitants.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE said, the inhabitants were a mixed people chiefly engaged in trade, and they had nothing to do with the Arabs, who were wholly and absolutely a separate body. They came up to Suakin for no such purpose as the hon. Baronet had foreshadowed. He was surprised at the references made by the hon. Baronet, so well known for his humanity, to the suppression of the Slave Trade, in connection with which England had spent so much of English life and strength and so much of English treasure. The success of our efforts for suppression was derided; and, indeed, there had been but too much of failure. That was all the greater reason for persevering till we achieved full success. For such success the retention of Suakin was essential. The Arabs knew that, and, therefore, they attacked the place. The hon. Baronet, in his usual manner, spoke lightly of British prestige, and averred that the Arabs, if driven away now, would come back again presently. Would they? That would entirely depend on the arrangements which the British Government might make in the future. The hon. Baronet spoke of 400 men being killed by British artillery and British bayonets for defending their country. Now, these men were not defending their own country; on the contrary, it was widely separated from their own; they were attacking somebody else's country; practically our country—the country of the inhabitants of Suakin, which was under the Egyptian Government and British protection. We were the defenders, and the Arabs the aggressive and attacking party. Having criticized the remarks of the hon. Baronet, he desired to make one or two general observations. While we should make no terms whatever with these Khartoum Arabs, we should endeavour, by negotiations, to settle matters with the friendly tribes on the coast of the Red Sea. In this respect he agreed with the substance of what was said by the right hon. Member for Newcastle (Mr. John Morley). Though he could not altogether approve the tone of the right hon. Gentleman's remarks, yet that did not prevent him from acknowledging the merit of their substance. The inhabitants of Suakin were largely dependent on these tribes for water and provisions, and it was, therefore, important to be on friendly terms with them. But, what was more, the invading Arabs from the Nile could not get these necessaries except through those tribes. So by making a settlement with the tribes the British Government could cut off the supplies on which invaders must depend. The hon. Baronet had appealed to their social and political consciences, and asked them how, at this Christmas season, in the sight of Almighty God, they could go home in peace after slaughtering all these Arabs? He would answer this challenge. We had undertaken these operations for the protection of those whom we had undertaken to protect, and that, in doing so, we were fulfilling a political duty which involved many important considerations, the first of which was this—that we were aiming a blow at those who added to the sorrows of the human race, and we were striking off the fetters from the slave.

MR. W. A. M'ARTHUR (Cornwall, Mid, St. Austell) said, he had been unable to agree with his hon. Friends around him with regard to the Egyptian policy of the Government. He had, however, opposed the military operations, because he did not know with what object they had been undertaken. It might be a Jingo sentiment, but he had always been in favour of a frank declaration that we should never come out of Egypt. He thought it was wrong to bombard Alexandria; but, having done what we had done, after spending so much money, after sacrificing so many lives, disorganizing and smashing up the Government, it was preposterous for us to abandon the people of Egypt to the misgovernment which must succeed our departure. Why did not the Government say plainly whether they intended to go out of Egypt or to stay there? He should cordially welcome any statement from Her Majesty's Government that they proposed to remain in Egypt, and should be prepared on such a statement to support the policy of defending Suakin against the dervishes. If, however, the Government were intending to leave Egypt, he considered it was monstrous to go on spending money and destroying lives in defending Suakin. He appealed to the Government to state distinctly what their Egyptian policy was; so long, however, as they declined to make any definite announcement, the only thing he could do was to oppose their doing anything at all, and persistently to vote against every part of their policy in that country.

MR. PICTON (Leicester) said, that if he had known that those were the views of the hon. Member he should never have spent six days in helping him to get into that House. The hon. Member for the Cockermouth Division (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) said that human life had been sacrificed unnecessarily, and he (Mr. Picton) was quite in agreement with him. The hon. Baronet opposite (Sir Richard Temple) said that he agreed with the criticism that the Government had not taken pains to negotiate with the coast tribes near Suakin.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE said, that he had never said so. He was not aware what negotiations had taken place. What he said was that negotiations should take place in the future.

MR. PICTON asked whether humanity and Christianity did not require that such negotiations should have been made before the outbreak of hostilities? We had now roused a bitter spirit of vengeance.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE said, he was sorry to interrupt the hon. Member again, but the hon. Gentleman seemed to confuse two sets of persons of whom he spoke. Negotiation with these Arabs was out of the question. The persons with whom we should negotiate were the friendly tribes—a totally different class.

MR. PICTON said, he was quite aware of the hon. Member's argument, but his (Mr. Picton's) point was that the negotiations with the leaders of the Native tribes ought to have been opened before there had been any bloodshed. He believed that before this morning's battle the local tribes and their leaders would have been more willing to negotiate than afterwards. That being so, the hon. Baronet had conceded his (Mr Picton's) whole point, which was that human life had been needlessly sacrificed. It was high time, as representing a great, valiant, and Christian nation, that the House of Commons should show a little more appreciation of the value of human life than it had hitherto done. He regretted that the terrible announcement of the slaughter of these people—described as a "brilliant victory"—should have been received with cheers, as he feared that such an example was likely to intensify the warlike feeling which, unhappily, was too apparent among the public outside. Death was terrible under any condition, but it was more terrible still when it occurred under such conditions as the destruction of the 400 lives that were sacrificed that morning. He was sure that no hon. Gentleman opposite would in private contend that it was right to regard with feelings of triumph any wholesale slaughter. There were occasions when congratulations over victory might be exchanged, as, for instance, if our country were threatened with invasion; but in the case of the battle at Suakin the circumstances were totally different. Neither British subjects nor those whom Great Britain was defending were in any danger; and the only crime of the coast tribes was that they had accepted the opinion of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, to the effect that Suakin was no proper interest of England or Egypt, and they had simply resolved to carry out that policy. The Government had exhibited that vacillation and uncertainty in their policy with regard to Suakin which usually led to bloodshed. It was not in the interest of repressing the Slave Trade they had acted. If hon. Gentlemen opposite, instead of descending to the low, vulgar glee caused by bloodshed in this country, would feel the solemnity of the responsibility pressing upon them, they would take the wiser, more prudent, and more philanthropic policy of entering into negotiations, not with the Khartoum Arabs, but with the Native tribes along the coast of the Red Sea.

MR. PHILIPPS (Lanark, Mid) said, he thought that hon. Members might be allowed to discuss the wisdom of keeping any particular city in the desert without having such words as "scuttle,"

"surrender," and "national self-effacement" hurled at them across the floor of the House. The hon. Baronet the Member for Evesham (Sir Richard Temple) said that their defence of Suakin was not aggressive; but he asked hon. Members to consider the hypothetical case of a French force some day taking Brighton by force and maintaining themselves there. If the English people were in consequence to attack Brighton, were they to be told by the French that their policy was aggressive? That would be, to his mind, a defensive policy, because its object would be to win back English territory. The hon. Baronet talked of the Slave Trade as an excuse for keeping Suakin, but it was a pity he did not quote any evidence. He (Mr. Philipps) had read all the Blue Books on the Slave Trade, and he could not find one line which would justify the assertion that the retention of Suakin had stopped the embarkation of a single slave. It was rather strange that hon. Members opposite should at last be showing some zeal in suppressing the Slave Trade, for not many years ago a Conservative Government had issued a Fugitive Slave Circular. The hon. Baronet offered another excuse for retaining Suakin. He said we were defending the inhabitants of Suakin against their invaders. Even if that were true, what business was that of ours? Why should the poor suffering taxpayers of this country be called upon to defend the inhabitants of Suakin against anyone? Most of those on the Opposition side of the House objected to the occupation of Suakin—first, because they believed it to be of no use; and, secondly, because they believed its retention was a national crime. In his opinion hon. Members opposite had only one real reason for the policy they supported, although they had given three; and that was that they coveted Suakin, and believed in some vague way that it would be of some use to the British Empire. They dare not, however, use that argument, because they knew that the English people would not listen to it.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): The hon. Gentleman who has just sat down has stated in very energetic language his views upon this question; and he said that "we" object to the occupation of Suakin, in the first place because there is no use in it, and in the second place because its retention is a national crime. I wonder whether when he said "we object" he thought that he was expressing the view of the Party who sit opposite, and the view of those who are generally upon the Front Bench opposite? [The Front Opposition Bench was quite vacant.] Though the hon. Member may have read all the Blue Books on the subject of slavery he has not read those upon the subject of Egypt and Suakin, otherwise he would have seen that one of the chief reasons for the defence and occupation of Suakin is that the Government of the right hon. Member for Mid Lothian (Mr. Gladstone) undertook to defend the ports upon the Red Sea, and entered into an engagement which we have to carry out. Therefore, the hon. Gentleman must clearly see that to regard the holding of Suakin as a national crime is not the view of the responsible Leaders of the Opposition. The whole fallacy of this matter came out in a striking form in the speech of the hon. Member. The idea is that Suakin belongs to the dervishes.

MR. PHILIPPS: I never said that Suakin belonged to the dervishes, or anything of the kind.

MR. GOSCHEN: Quite so. That shows the hon. Gentleman's confusion of mind. He did not see the effect of his own argument. His argument was that if Brighton, belonging to the English, were taken by the French and then attacked by the English, that would not be an aggressive policy on the part of England, showing that the hon. Member thinks that the inhabitants of Suakin and the tribes are practically the same people. It is not only the hon. Gentleman who has fallen into that error. The hon. Baronet the Member for the Cockermouth Division of Cumberland (Sir Wilfrid Lawson) said that Suakin belonged to a people struggling to be free. But the dervishes against whom we are fighting are not struggling to be free or to make Suakin free. They come from hundreds of miles away. Everyone who studies the case carefully must say that the dervishes threatening Suakin are of a totally different nationality from those people who are at Suakin. They have never established any right to Suakin. That is the point. We are there at the wish and with the concurrence of the rulers of the country, whereas the dervishes are there as enemies of the people, who have come from a distance.

SIR GEORGE CAMPELL (Kirkcaldy, &c.,): They were called in by the inland tribes.

MR. GOSCHEN: If the hon. Member believes that, I must say that I must give him up, as that is utterly opposed to the whole evidence. The hon. Member has been travelling so far over all parts of the globe for his arguments this evening that we must forgive him if on some particular point he falls now and then into error. The friendly tribes have complained to us over and over again that they have been prevented and discouraged from making raids on the Arabs who have been coming to despoil them. The friendly tribes are entirely opposed to the dervishes. It is extremely important if any hon. Members, or any part of the country, believe that Suakin belongs in the slightest degree to the dervishes or to the allies of the dervishes, that they should be informed that that is a complete mistake. The whole of the argument, as I said, as to its being a crime to hold Suakin is based upon this error. Let it further be remembered that it is the religious fanaticism of the dervishes and their Slave Trade tendencies which have animated them in all these campaigns. That is evident from all the information in our possession. I pass now to answer the questions which have been put as to the intentions of the Government. The hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Sir George Campbell) asks for a reiterated pledge from the Government that we will not advance further into the country. But why should he claim a reiterated pledge? What is the good of giving a pledge three or four times, if the first and second time that pledge receives no credence at the hands of hon. Members? Does the hon. Member think it would be worthy of the Government of a country like this to say before a battle is fought that we intended no aggression and no distant expeditions, and that the moment after the battle had been fought we should change our minds? He need not be under any apprehension of this kind. We have not viewed the attack upon the intrenchments of the dervishes as one of those extraordinary operations which require so much attention as has been given to it. It was a military operation undertaken to turn out a comparatively small force. Now that that is completed, the general policy of the Government will not be altered in the slightest degree. I will not add to what the Government have said already with regard to their determination to adhere to the pledges which they have made. Then hon. Members have asked what is our policy with regard to Egypt in general? There, again, we have given the most specific declarations. We have said that our policy is the same policy which was embodied in the Convention negotiated by Sir H. Drummond Wolff with the Sultan of Turkey. We are pledged before Europe not to occupy Egypt permanently. That is the distinct pledge we have given, and there is no reason why we should repeat that pledge. Our policy is to remain in Egypt until Egypt is strong enough to hold her own, and until the new régime which has been established is in a position to be able to maintain internal order, and to maintain itself sufficiently against external enemies to the south, or in any other direction. That is the policy which has been announced, and I believe that that is a policy which generally commends itself even to the bulk of hon. Members opposite. From that policy we do not intend to deviate. I deny entirely that there is any obscurity as to the policy of the Government as regards Egypt. I say distinctly that we do not look upon the occupation of Egypt as strengthening the position of this country. It is with no desire for aggrandizement that we have occupied Egypt; and, whatever views may prevail in any part of the country, I can assure the House that the Government adhere to the policy which they have so often stated. That is all I wish to say upon the immediate question before the House on this Amendment. I really think the Amendment might be withdrawn in view of the fact that the statements I have made are sufficiently explicit, even if they are not satisfactory to some hon. Members opposite. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether I should be in Order in replying to the other hon. Members who have raised points in debate before this Amendment was moved? If so, I should like to say a few words in reply to the hon. Member for Caithness (Dr. Clark).

SIR WILFRID LAWSON: On a point of Order, Sir, I wish to ask whether we should not confine ourselves to the subject immediately under discussion?

MR. SPEAKER: This is one of the subjects which did arise before the Amendment was moved; but it may be for the convenience of hon. Members that the remarks of the right hon. Gentleman should relate to the immediate subject before the House.

MR. GOSCHEN: Then, Sir, I will only say that the events at Suakin are an encouragement even in the direction desired by hon. Gentlemen opposite, as proving the bravery and dash of the Egyptian troops themselves. It has been a source of great satisfaction that these troops, carefully trained as they have been under English officers, though often depreciated in various quarters, have yet shown themselves, under proper leadership, capable of dealing with fanatical dervishes who are considered to be some of the bravest soldiers in the world. I think that this should be duly acknowledged by the people of this country, and it will show to the public at large that our efforts to train the Egyptian soldiers have not been in vain.

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes 83; Noes 49: Majority 34.—(Div. List, No. 356.)

Main Question again proposed,

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) said, he should like to obtain some further information with regard to the Anglo-German Agreement in relation to the Slave Trade on the East Coast of Africa. The country, he thought, would be anxious to be assured that there was no danger of this Agreement extending to operations on land. The effectiveness of the blockade had been much undermined by the practice of slave dhows sailing under the French flag, and he thought it would be well if some precise arrangement with regard to this matter was entered into with the French Government, otherwise complications might arise, especially if the Germans were to search a dhow carrying the French Flag. It was to be regretted that an International Conference had not been held on the subject, so that this matter of the Flag might be settled between the different nations, who might also have agreed that slave trading should be treated as piracy. If a few examples could be made of slavers taken red-handed being immediately shot, more would be done to put down the Slave Trade than could be done by any Anglo-German Agreement, though he did not say the Government could have done otherwise than accept the proposal of a friendly Power.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (Sir JAMES FERGUSSON) (Manchester, N.E.) said, he might assure the hon. Member once more that operations on the mainland of Africa were altogether outside the joint operations they had undertaken with Germany. Those objects were very plainly laid down, and he did not think there was any probability of their being departed from. Some inconvenience had, no doubt, been caused by the use of the French Flag by certain slave dhows. The French Government had not unnaturally objected to the right of searching vessels carrying the French Flag being exercised by any but Frenchmen, except under a regular blockade; but they expressed themselves as most earnest to put down this abuse, and there was good reason to believe that it would be checked by the French authorities themselves. There was every ground for hoping that now that the principal civilized nations of the world were banded together against this traffic they would succeed in putting it down.

COLONEL NOLAN (Galway, N.) said, he had on the Paper a Notice of Motion, which he was precluded from moving by the result of the Division. He, therefore, rose to urge that it would lead to a more satisfactory system of finance if a portion of the present large military and civil expenditure in Ireland were devoted to public works. There were signs that during the winter, in Galway and other large towns, there would be a large amount of unemployed labour which might be advantageously engaged upon public works. The taxes collected in Ireland exceeded £8,000,000, and of this Ireland got the benefit of about £2,000,000. The civil expenditure was excessive, and the military expenditure was heavier than that of France, Germany, or Russia. A million might very well be spent in developing the resources of the country by railways and harbours. The present Government was particularly pledged to a policy of development, but it had refused to do anything, because the House would not pass, without discussion, Bills for combined drainage and navigation, which would have involved a great waste of money. Two years had passed without the Government redeeming their promise, and now it would take a year and a-half before anything could be done which needed legislation. In the meantime the Irish people desired to have some of their own money spent in the country in order to relieve distress resulting from lack of employment.

MAJOR RASCH (Essex, S.E.) said, he desired to call attention to the wrong done to the poorest class of his constituents—agricultural labourers in Essex—by the action of the Charity Commissioners in diverting endowments left for the indigent poor to purposes which did not directly benefit them. There was one case of an endowment of £100 a-year, which was cut up into £50 for a schoolmaster, £30 for buildings, £10 for buying books, and £5 for the care of a well; and the residue, which was non-existent, was left for the poor. These things were not what the labourers wanted. What they asked for was a percentage of the net income of the funds in question to go towards the reduction of the necessary legal and other expenses in connection with the allotments scheme of last Session. The reason why the Allotments Act was, to a certain extent, unworkable, was because of the great initial expenses connected with it. If 5 or 10 per cent of the funds to which he had alluded, and which the labourers had a right to, could be devoted to the reduction of these expenses, there was no doubt that a great deal of land which was now doing nothing in Essex would be let out in allotments. He hoped that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would consider this matter during the Recess.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.) said, he thought that the Home Secretary ought to give a reply to the point raised by the hon. Member for Northampton (Mr. Bradlaugh) earlier in the evening with regard to the construction of the Statute of Edward III. as to the jurisdiction of magistrates in holding to bail persons of ill-fame. It was perfectly clear that the Statute, read with the word "not," which he believed had been inserted in error by the editor of the Revised Statutes, had no meaning, and that without the word "not" it dealt with two classes of persons. First, rioters and garrotters, whom the magistrates were directed to commit to prison; and, secondly, persons who had previously been of bad fame, but having mended their ways had become of good fame; and these the Justices were able to admit to bail and set them free. In his opinion it was abundantly clear that the construction of the Statute in Ireland, by which respectable people had been committed to prison, was an absurd one. A solicitor was now in custody in Ireland under this Statute, because he, being a respectable person and attending a sale of cattle, refused to give security to be of good behaviour. The Statute was not applicable to such cases, but to a class of persons not now in existence.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.) said, that he did not rise when the hon. Member for Northampton sat down, because the argument was more fitted for a Court of Law than for the House of Commons, and because a discussion of the Statute of Edward III., of which they had not an undoubted text before them, would be a waste of time. The meaning placed upon the Statute by the hon. Member was ludicrous. It amounted to this—that only robbers, &c. of good fame were to give security. In some of the versions the negative to which the hon. Member referred was not present, while in others it was. The point, no doubt, was an interesting one to legal antiquarians, but he might say that from the time of Lord Coke downwards the Statute had been treated as if the negative were in it. Every text book, and, he thought, every Court in England for 300 years had read the Statute with the negative in it; and if the Statute were not in the original roll, the matter was so established as part of the jurisdiction of the peace that he would not risk 6*d.* upon the chance of an appeal to any Superior Court to try and obtain a declaration that the jurisdiction did not exist.

MR. CREMER (Shoreditch, Haggerston) said, he wished, before the Bill was read a second time, to refer to a question as to which his constituents felt deeply. When the Police Vote was under discussion, the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary (Mr. Matthews) not only expressed his desire for the maintenance of law and order in the Metropolis, but stated that he was as anxious as any man to maintain the right of the people to meet on open spaces or in public meeting for the purpose of ventilating their grievances. In order to test the sincerity of the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary, he (Mr. Cremer) would repeat the question which he had asked when the Home Secretary made that statement, and to which as yet no reply had been given. The question was, whether the Government were willing to afford the people of London an opportunity of meeting in some central place to discuss their grievances, whenever they thought it advisable, under the same rules and regulations as applied to meetings in the Public Parks? If the Horse Guards' Parade was used for that purpose, interference with the traffic of the Metropolis would be avoided. Now, the cost of organizing a large meeting in London in a public hall was not much less than £100; and it was simply impossible for working men to incur that amount of expenditure. Metropolitan Members sitting on that side of the House had incurred some odium owing to their desire to prevent collisions between the people and the police in respect to the assertion of the right of public meeting in Trafalgar Square; and he wished to know whether the Government would allow the central open space which he had mentioned to be used in the way he had indicated? If nothing were done in that matter, more would be heard about it, he believed, at the next Election. The answer of the right hon. Gentleman was being looked forward to with interest and curiosity out-of-doors, because, if an unsatisfactory answer were given, he might observe—although he would not stoop to hint a threat in such a matter—it was not impossible, before the House re-assembled next year, that difficulties might recur in regard to meetings in Trafalgar Square or other open spaces, and he was anxious that the contest between the right hon. Gentleman, the police authorities, and the people of London should be closed. He had also to complain of what he contended was a system of sweating practised against the workmen employed under a firm of contractors—Messrs. Mowlem, Burt, and Freeman—in connection with that House, the British Museum, and other Government establishments. The wages of the men, which were always scanty enough, were, under that system, subjected to a deduction of 1*d.* per hour, making them still less than the sums voted by the House would provide. Since he brought this matter forward some time ago he was informed that, notwithstanding the promise which the Chief Commissioner of Works had then given to seriously consider the question, a fresh contract for three years had been signed with Messrs. Mowlem, Burt, and Freeman on the same terms. It was, he urged, an extraordinary thing that a Government which had sanctioned the appointment of the Committee to inquire into the evils of the sweating system should not set a better example in regard to the working men in their employment; and unless the evil to which he referred was remedied in the meantime he would next year move the reduction of the Vote for every Government Office where the contract system prevailed. He desired also to call attention to the conduct of the Government and of the Charity Commissioners in respect to endowments, and the effect which it was producing on the minds of the agricultural labourers and workmen generally, who entertained the belief that their endowments were being filched from them—that the poor were being robbed for the benefit of the rich—and they naturally asked by what right that was done. He asked hon. Members to seriously consider what there was to prevent working men from taking to heart the lesson thus taught them and applying the same doctrine to the property of the wealthy classes.

MR. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) said, he wished to call attention to the miscarriage of justice at Edlingham, in the imprisonment of the men Brannaghan and Murphy. He maintained that this was not a matter which ought to be huddled up. A certain amount of suspicion and distrust had been created in the public mind by the fact that at the second trial the charge of attempt to murder had been abandoned, and consequently the case had not been fully investigated. He urged the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary either to make public the evidence which was taken at the inquiry already held, or to hold a fresh inquiry of such a character as to allow the proceedings to be published. So far as he was aware there was no desire for a criminal prosecution in this case, but there was an urgent desire that steps should be taken to make it more difficult in future for miscarriages of justice of this kind to occur. This end was only likely to be secured by the fullest publicity. He desired next to call attention to the protracted sittings of Crown Courts in the country in consequence of insufficient time being allowed for the business of Assizes to be transacted. He hoped steps would be taken to secure the attendance at Assizes, where they were likely to be required, of the barristers or Queen's Counsel included with the Judges in the Commission.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY FOR IRELAND (Mr. A. J. BALFOUR) (Manchester, E.) said, as the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary was unable by the Rules of Debate to speak again, he would say that his right hon. Friend thought that the present condition of affairs with reference to the Edlingham burglary was extremely unsatisfactory. That arose from the fact that the two cases were not really brought before the jury at the last trial. In no sense was it due to the fault of his right hon. Friend, who went out of his way to see that the cases should be brought before the jury and the evidence re-surveyed. That, however, was not done; and his right hon. Friend now thought that it would not be desirable to hold such an inquiry as that suggested, because it could not be an inquiry on oath. It was, therefore, scarcely possible that an inquiry of this kind would conduce to the ends of justice, or that the case would be improved by the method suggested by the hon. Member. A question had been raised as to the holding of meetings in open spaces. His right hon. Friend reiterated the expression of opinion previously given. He was anxious to further as much as he could the interests of all who desired to discuss public questions in London. There were, however, other interests to be thought of in reference to those meetings, and the particular remedy suggested was still under the consideration of his right hon. Friend and those who were charged with the management of and responsibility for the space at the Horse Guards. The hon. and gallant Member for North Galway (Colonel Nolan) complained that Ireland was particularly ill-used in connection with the distribution of Imperial funds. The conclusion he had himself arrived at from a study of public documents was very different; it was that Ireland was not only well but generously treated in that respect. On the authority of a man named Mulhall, the hon. and gallant Gentleman told the House that the military expenditure in Ireland was greater than in any other country in Europe, not excepting France or Germany. Well, on the only occasion on which he had looked into Mulhall's book, he found that Mulhall was grievously in error. Did the hon. and gallant Gentleman think that the people for whom he spoke would like to see the Military Forces of the Crown diminished in Ireland? His own observation was that no heavier punishment could be inflicted on any locality in Ireland than to withdraw the Military Forces of the Crown from it.

COLONEL NOLAN: The money could be spent on public works.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR said, that would not be the least consolation. The hon. and gallant Gentleman desired to see a policy of public works carried into effect on a large scale. So did the Government. The hon. and gallant Gentleman seemed to think that one of the chief objects to be gained was to retain in Ireland a population which could not otherwise exist there. If there was any likelihood of the population of any district being permanently able to find employment in their own country, he should rejoice in starting public works to enable them to tide over a period of temporary depression. But the idea of a permanent policy of public works for the purpose of providing wages for a class of the population which could not otherwise find a subsistence in the country he should regard as absolutely disastrous to the class in whose interest it was proposed. The policy of public works was not stopped, because the Government had not been able to carry out their drainage scheme. Under the existing law, it was competent for the Treasury to lend large sums for those harbour and railway works which the hon. and gallant Gentleman and which he himself also desired to see carried out. But when the hon. and gallant Gentleman said that 2½ years had elapsed since the Government promised a policy of public works, and nothing had been done, he must protest against such an accusation. In the first place, a Royal Commission was appointed to make a searching inquiry, and when they had done so they distinctly laid down that the work to be first taken in hand was a main drainage scheme. He laid a main drainage scheme on the Table, which differed in many respects, but particularly in two, from the recommendations of the Royal Commission. In the first place, they gave larger powers to the locality to determine what should or should not be done under these schemes, and, in the next place, they altered the suggestions of the Commission in the direction of far more generous grants—[Colonel NOLAN: No, no!]—for the purpose of carrying out the great object of arterial drainage.

COLONEL NOLAN: The right hon. Gentleman forgets that they cut down the Shannon to one-third.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR said, he was speaking of the schemes as a whole, and, taking them as a whole, as they had been brought by the Government. The scheme of the Government, therefore, was far more generous than they were, in the early shape, put before the country in the Report of the Royal Commission. The hon. and gallant Gentleman accused the Government of combining drainage and navigation. But they had so altered the scheme which was to apply both to the Bann and the Shannon, that in no case in future should the interests of navigation in any way interfere with the interests of drainage.

MR. PHILIPPS asked the Government whether, at the earliest possible period next Session, they would bring forward some measure dealing with the question of mineral royalties? In the constituency he represented it was felt to be a very great grievance indeed.

MR. SPEAKER: Order! Such a subject does not come within the scope of a discussion on the Appropriation Bill.

MR. CLANCY (Dublin Co., N.) said, with reference to the subject of public works in Ireland, the Government simply offered those works as moral bribes to induce the people to depart from a patriotic course of action. The Irish people did not want such doles from the British Parliament. As to the point raised by the hon. Member for Northampton, he contended that it had never yet been raised before the Courts. With regard to the appointment of Sub-Commissioners under the Land Act; in the list of the 10 new Land Commissions he could find the names not only of several men who had been landlords themselves, and recognized as landlords, but of men who had actually figured in the Land Courts as landlords' valuers. One of these was Mr. Deane, one of the most prominent Tories and supporters of the landlord party in Dublin, a secretary of the Dublin Constitutional Club, an active Tory registration agent, and a man who has been working with the landlord party for the whole of his public life. In 1881 he became a landlords' valuer in Dublin, and some of his exploits in that capacity had become notorious, and, indeed, were calculated to give the impression that he would not be appointed to act impartially between landlord and tenant. A Dublin tenant-farmer, writing to him in reference to Mr. Deane's appointment, said, "I intended to go into the Land Court, but after Mr. Deane's appointment I gave it up." The Government were sowing dragons' teeth in Ireland, and they were cultivating an agitation which would exceed anything that had gone before.

MR. CONYBEARE (Cornwall, Camborne) said, he wished to call attention to a matter which had already been brought before the House, but which he feared had not received due attention. That was the condition of the nailmakers and chainmakers of Cradley Heath, Staffordshire. He regretted that the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary was absent. The information from Cradley Heath was not satisfactory. There was an epidemic of fever in the place. Representations had been made by many influential persons in the district, and strong appeals had been made to Members of Parliament to draw the attention of the Government to the question.

The same tactics, however, were followed in this case as in the Metropolis, and persons who were anxious to ventilate their grievances were hustled and assaulted by the police. The hon. Member was proceeding in some detail to discuss the imperfect sanitation of the district and the misery and poverty of these chainmakers, when

MR. SPEAKER said, he must remind the hon. Member that he was anticipating a Motion which was on the Paper for that day.

MR. CONYBEARE said, that he would ask the Government whether their attention had been called to a passage in Mr. Burnett's report referring to the evasion of the Truck Acts, and the existence in the district of shops full of provisions, which were usually kept closed, and to which admittance was with difficulty obtained, but which undoubtedly carried on a secret business with the workpeople in contravention of the law? There was no legal proof, and in only one case had the police effected an entrance, and it was eminently a case for searching inquiry. He should be glad to know whether the Government intended to take any action. When distinct evidence was produced emphasizing and reiterating the accounts of the insanitary condition of the district, and when it was known that the people could not deal with the state of things themselves, a case had been made out which demanded the immediate attention of the Government. If the matter were not dealt with the endurance of the people might come to an end, and they might demand the ear of the country in another manner.

MR. GILL (Louth, S.) said, he must press the hon. and learned Solicitor General for Ireland for an answer to the question raised by the hon. Gentleman the junior Member for Northampton in regard to the Statute of Edward III. He asked the hon. and learned Solicitor General whether the Attorney General would issue his fiat to enable Mr. Hurley, a solicitor, to move for a writ of error, and, if necessary, to have the matter brought to the House of Lords to test the applicability of the Act of Edward III. to his case. He also wished to draw attention to the new use to which the Police Force in Ireland was being put. During the last 12 months or two years the Police Force had been constantly employed for the purpose of following the movements of certain well-known popular men throughout Ireland. A remarkable illustration of this fact had been provided when the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary had cited to the public extracts from police note-books with regard to the movements of Mr. Mandeville. The Chief Secretary had recently expressed his opinion that the use of handcuffs should not be resorted to except in certain exceptional cases, and he desired to know whether that expression of opinion on the part of the right hon. Gentleman would be construed as a specific instruction to the police of Ireland on the subject.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) said, that the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary's statement with reference to the use of handcuffs was perfectly clear, and that he had nothing to add to it. With regard to the action which the Attorney General would take if a writ of error were issued, that matter rested entirely in the discretion of the Attorney General, and he could not possibly give, by anticipation, an opinion as to what course would be pursued in the event of a writ of error being presented to him for his fiat. No doubt he would do what was right.

SIR EDWARD J. REED (Cardiff) said, he wished, as the Representative of more inhabitants than any other Member of the House, to express the great and inexpressible dissatisfaction of the people at the manner in which the Government of Ireland was being conducted. The result of the attention which he had given to the subject was that he believed that the people of Ireland were at this moment abandoned by their National protectors—namely, the Government of the country. There was nothing in the speeches of the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary, or of any Member of the Government, to show the least desire that the people committed to the control of the police should not suffer from their violence. On the contrary, it seemed to him that the Irish Magistrates and the Constabulary received from the Ministerial Bench the gravest encouragement to do what they liked in Ireland, with the assurance that the people would meet with no protection from the Government.

It was not wonderful that the Irish Members should protest in season or out of season against such a state of things. To suppose that the Business of the House under the present conditions could be conducted with smoothness and rapidity, or with satisfaction to the country, was to indulge in the idlest of dreams. The present state of things was not to be cured by any process but one, which could be very well conjectured by hon. Gentlemen on the Ministerial Benches. The Government must now go forward with the policy to which they were committed. It was a course of procedure which handed over the people of Ireland to the Constabulary; and he failed to see that the Government were at all anxious to allay the apprehension which existed in this country as well as in Ireland with regard to this state of things. If the Government intended to meet the House next Session under such circumstances as now existed, did they expect to get Business rapidly carried forward? It did not rest with a majority of that House to carry out any method which would remedy the present state of affairs with regard to Business while Ireland was governed as it now was, because in order to proceed with any proposal of the kind they would have to silence the Representatives of the people to such an extent that the country would not sanction it. A good deal had been said about the prolonged debates on the Estimates; but he might say that the public money would not be voted away in the future as it had been in the past without much consideration. Even if the Irish Members were so recreant to their constituents as not to examine the Irish Estimates as they ought to be examined, many English Members on those Benches would rise in their places to discuss the Estimates, in order to have the present infamous administration brought to the front.

DR. FITZGERALD (Longford, S.) said, he contended that it was the bounden duty of the House of Commons to protect the Irish people from violence. He wished to refer to a peaceable meeting at Longford, which was dispersed with violence by the police without warning or the reading of the riot Act, and he had to complain that agents of the Irish Government disturbed quiet counties and towns and outraged the people, and that instead of the offenders being brought to justice they were promoted and pensioned. The police, who ought to be protectors of the people, were perverted by the Government into an armed force of banditti, demanding ransom from the people on behalf of the landlords, who were associated, he might say, in conspiracy with the Irish Executive. It was because he desired that law should be respected and not outraged in Ireland that he asked the House to intervene between the police and their violence, and he hoped that they would soon see removed from power a Government which was at once a curse to the peace and prosperity of Ireland, and also the worst enemy to the best interests of England.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY, WAR DEPARTMENT (Mr. BRODRICK) (Surrey, Guildford) in moving that the Order be discharged and the Bill withdrawn, pointed out that the locality was in favour of the Bill; but that, owing to the opposition offered to the progress of the measure at this period of the Session, it was impossible to proceed further with it now. He would suggest to the hon. Members who had Amendments on the Paper with reference to the stoppage of a certain footpath, they should confer with the people of the neighbourhood with the view of seeing whether it was not possible for them to withdraw their opposition to the Bill. If the footpath in question was not stopped up, it would be impossible to carry on a dangerous trade within a certain distance of it.

LIBEL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.—(No. 304.)

(The Lord Monkswell.)

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

Commons' Amendments to Lords' Amendments, and Commons' reasons for disagreeing to one of the Lords' Amendments, considered (according to Order).

LORD MONKSWELL said, he would ask their Lordships to agree to the Commons' Amendments. There were only three. In Clause 4 the Commons' had re-inserted after the words "public concern," "and the publication of which is not for the public benefit." He did not understand that their Lordships, upon a previous occasion, felt very strongly on this point; and he hoped their Lordships would now agree to these words. The next clause was one moved by Lord Waterford, making, under certain conditions, a speaker whose speech was reported liable for the words spoken as if he had himself written and published them. That clause had been struck out, and, having regard to the very extensive change it would make in the law, he was not indisposed to agree to its omission. In Clause 9, which placed the power of granting a fiat for criminal proceedings against a newspaper in the hands of the Attorney General or a Judge at Chambers, the House of Commons had struck out "the Attorney General."

Moved, "To agree to the Commons' Amendment on Clause 4."—(The Lord Monkswell.)

THE PRIME MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of SALISBURY) said, he thought the alteration was an unfortunate one. Still, he would assent to the Motion.

Motion agreed to.

Moved, "Not to insist on the Lords' Amendment inserting Clause 5."

LORD FITZGERALD said, that the clause was not originally inserted in the Bill, but was inserted by the noble and learned Lord (Lord Herschell), and subsequently amended by a Motion proposed by the noble Marquess (the Marquess of Waterford). Though he voted in favour of the clause, still it no doubt made a very considerable alteration in the law, and it might be desirable that the subject should be more fully considered and dealt with in a separate Bill.

THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY said, he was placed at a disadvantage owing to the absence of both the noble Lord who proposed the clause, and the noble Lord who moulded it, and also by the period of the Session at which they had arrived; but he felt the House would do well not to insist upon the clause. It was rather hard that the House of Commons should, owing to the peculiarity of their mode of disposing of business, have given practically no time for a reasonable discussion on their Amendments. The change entailed by the clause was undoubtedly very large; it was quite a new one, and required the most careful consideration, and they might very easily, if they adopted it without consideration, inflict hardship. It proposed to make a speaker liable for a report of his speech, unless he proved that such report was inaccurate. Public men were exceedingly well reported when the reporters were near them; but there was no limit to the extraordinary statements attributed to a speaker when the reporters were at the other end of the room. It would, he thought, be necessary to provide better machinery than that contained in this clause in order to carry out its object; and this might best be done by a separate piece of legislation, after having watched the Libel Amendment Bill in practice, and having seen whether any evils arose. If evils did arise, doubtless they would be able to induce the House of Commons to join with them in providing the necessary remedies. He, therefore, hoped that their Lordships would not insist on this clause.

Amendment to Clause 9 agreed to.

EAST AFRICA.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN, in rising to call attention to East African affairs and to move for Papers, said, that the Zanzibar question was a most serious one, and it had become more serious than it was when he last addressed their Lordships on the subject. The information before Parliament and the public was of a most meagre kind. We had embarked in an undertaking of which the end could not be foreseen. About three weeks ago he gave their Lordships reasons for anticipating that great difficulties might arise out of our action in those waters. He then said that there was no reason to suppose from the Correspondence before Parliament that Germany was in any sense precluded from military undertakings, and that he was very anxious and uneasy on the subject. Unfortunately, events had justified him in what he then said; and he devoutly wished they had not done so. Operations had been undertaken on land; two towns had been bombarded, and one completely destroyed; and British Indian subjects had suffered grievous loss of property, while, of course, there had been loss of life on the part of the natives. If the matter was serious three weeks ago it was much more serious now. What was the object of the operations? Our object in the blockade was the suppression of the Slave Trade; but we had the authority of Bishop Smythies—and it was difficult to find a better—for the belief that the operations of Germany had nothing to do with the Slave Trade, and, as affecting its suppression, the blockade was, to use his words, a "gigantic fraud." There might be some exaggeration in these words; but there could be little doubt, from the strong opinion he expressed, that the suppression of the Slave Trade was not likely to be furthered by the blockade, and that the operations on shore were not rendered necessary by any proceedings of the Slave Traders. It was easy to see what the effect of the operations was to be. It was to re-establish the German East African Company in the position which it had forfeited by its blunders. The Prime Minister, in a despatch to Sir Edward Malet, was very strong on that point. He had no objection to the re-establishment of a trading company of any country. England would always be willing to assist any nation in extending civilizing influence in savage or semi-savage countries. But the question was not quite so simple when the lives and interests of British subjects were involved. British subjects had suffered, and were suffering seriously, and the correspondent of The Times said that their position was daily becoming worse. British interests were likely to suffer in a diminution of British influence, for which no compensation was possible. Our position was peculiar, because the British Crown had more Mahomedan subjects than any other Power. On that account it behoved us to be exceptionally careful in dealing with questions that affected Mahomedan peoples. At one time we had a large and even a commanding influence at Zanzibar; and the waning of our influence had not been attended with salutary results. It would be a lamentable thing that the influence of this country should be jeopardized, not only in Zanzibar, but on the mainland, by the action we were taking in concert with Germany. It was idle to say we could dissociate ourselves from responsibility for the action of Germany because we did not participate actively in the operations on land. It would require more sophistry and casuistry than were possessed by the Natives to enable them to draw a distinction between operations on land and operations at sea. He did not see what the end was to be. The debate in the Reichstag was most instructive. The tenour of it was to the effect that operations on land were to be continued. The Representative of Hamburg said that the Slave Trade would not be suppressed by operations confined to the sea. The Representative of another important town said that the object was to re-establish the East African Company, and to let all people know that when Germany had put her foot down she would not withdraw. These sentiments were not explained away nor extenuated as the debate proceeded. The Foreign Minister suggested that there should be a gendarmerie of 800 or 900 men under 30 European officers, with a reserve at Zanzibar. What would be our position supposing this gendarmerie was created? It appeared to him that we were going too far, or else not far enough, in this matter. He could judge only by the Papers which had been presented to Parliament, and, as far as he could see, no provision had been made whereby this country had any voice whatever in determining whether operations were to be conducted on land or not, and what limit was to be placed upon any operations which might be undertaken. He saw no provision whatever whereby this country was to withdraw from the arrangements, whatever they might be, that Her Majesty's Government had entered into with Germany. These partnerships were, in his opinion, matters of doubtful utility, and the experience of them in the past was not very re-assuring. The utterance of the Prime Minister the other day, and what had taken place since, reminded him of a statement made by Lord Derby some time ago. Lord Derby assured their Lordships and the country that there was no reason to suppose that any foreign country had designs upon New Guinea. That utterance was closely followed by the annexation of the greater part of New Guinea and one or two other islands. With regard to Zanzibar, the Prime Minister a little while ago said that the German Government had no intention to resort to any action on shore, and these words were closely followed by action on shore. He did not mean for one moment to attribute any want of bona fides on the part of the noble Marquess, but he wished to point out how impossible it was for the best instructed mind to foretell in cases of this kind the course which events might take. There was another matter which appeared to be very ominous, and that was the absolute silence of noble Lords who usually sat on the Front Bench opposite. Lord Granville had been Foreign Secretary and Colonial Minister. Lord Derby had also occupied those posts, and his policy changed sides before he did himself. He had no hesitation in saying that the general policy of those two noble Lords must be baneful to the interests of this country; and that if their policy had not been controlled and interrupted by the occasional inroads of a sensible Tory policy it would have been disastrous to the interests of the United Kingdom. He thought it most ominous that noble Lords who sat on the Front Bench opposite appeared to entirely approve the state of things which existed at the present time on the East Coast of Africa. He had before said that certain eventualities might occur which would possibly entangle this country in a position from which it might be difficult to extricate her without jeopardizing her neutrality or without causing friction. An influential portion of the French Press had expressed the utmost satisfaction at the position of this country in connection with Germany at Zanzibar. France and Germany were happily at profound peace with each other, but it was absurd to suppose that they entertained towards each other feelings of profound affection, and we could not blind ourselves to the fact that things might occur which might lead to a European war. He held it most dangerous, therefore, that this country should be placed in a position in which she would be likely in any way to compromise her neutrality, or from which she could only extract herself by giving offence to one country or another. That was all he wished to say upon this question. What he complained of was the scantiness of the information laid before Parliament. They had absolutely no knowledge whatever of the attitude of France in regard to this matter. They only knew that France absolutely denied the construction put upon her words and intentions. They had no information of the nature of the arrangements made with Portugal, or of the actual opinions of Italy or any other of the Great Powers. They had no knowledge as to the nature of any agreement entered into by this country with Germany, or as to whether any agreement had been entered into. They had no knowledge as to whether this country had any voice whatever in deciding the nature of the operations that took place, or as to whether any operations would take place on shore. And they had no knowledge of any means by which the Government could extricate the country from its present position. If he were speaking from a Party point of view he would urge the noble Lords on the Front Ministerial Bench to consider the fact that the one thing which the people of this country disliked was to be kept in ignorance. He hoped that it might be possible before Parliament was prorogued for the Government to give some further information upon these matters. Before he sat down he wished to say a word or two as to the position of affairs at Suakin. The action of the Government in both these cases was influenced by the same motive—the suppression of the Slave Trade. He would not enter fully into the question whether or not negotiations might have been attempted before an action was fought. His opinion was that, considering the position in which matters were, it would have been perfectly useless to attempt to negotiate without having first dislodged the enemy. They had dislodged the enemy, and had had a very brilliant and complete success, occasioning, no doubt, a considerable loss of human life, which must be regretted. This action might have been absolutely necessary; but at least it was their duty to consider whether they could not in the future deal with the question without the necessity of destroying human life. He took it that Suakin was to be retained. The words of the noble Marquess upon the retention of Suakin had been considerably canvassed of late, and no doubt it would be interessing if the Prime Minister would explain what his meaning was when he spoke about the value of Suakin to Egypt. He looked upon what the noble Marquess had said as not being the words of the Prime Minister, speaking, as it were, ex cathedrâ, but merely saying that if he were in the position of Egypt he would not consider Suakin of vital importance. It was a totally different thing to lay it down that in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government Suakin was of no importance to Egypt. He took it that Suakin was of great strategical importance to Egypt, and to any country vitally interested in Egypt. Suakin was also essential to our success in dealing effectually with the Slave Trade. He therefore hoped it was the intention of the Government to retain Suakin. If so, the question was how it could be occupied at the least expense of human life and money. The course of re-conquering the Soudan was out of the question, but there was the alternative of endeavouring by negotiation to occupy Suakin with the consent of the neighbouring coast tribes. One thing which was universally held to be utterly repugnant to the coast tribes was Egyptian rule; and if they were assured that they would not be handed over to Egyptian rule, and that we occupy Suakin directly and not as agents of Egypt, there was little doubt that negotiations could be successfully entered into with them. There was a strong feeling among a military party that our policy was to take Handoub and other places, and establish ourselves in the vicinity of Suakin. Therefore, he thought it would be well if Her Majesty's Government would express their intention not to go any further, if that was their fixed determination. He also asked whether they would endeavour to open negotiations with the coast tribes. By that proceeding, and also by encouraging legitimate trade, they would be doing the only thing by which they could succeed in suppressing the Slave Trade. The Arabs were keen traders, and by all accounts the coast tribes were anxious to trade; and there would be no difficulty in dealing with them provided they felt certain that under no circumstances would they be handed over to Egypt, and that Suakin would be occupied by us directly. He believed that in the adoption of that policy lay the only solution of that question. The future repetition of the events of yesterday morning, brilliant as was their success, would be a subject of regret, but they must look for their recurrence unless they could devise some more safe and satisfactory way of occupying Suakin; and that result could only be attained, as he had said, by securing the friendship of the coast tribes and occupying Suakin ourselves in the manner that he had indicated.

The noble Earl concluded by moving for the production of Papers.

Moved, "That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty for Papers relating to East African affairs."—(The Earl of Dunraven.)

THE PRIME MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of SALISBURY): My Lords, I confess there is some difficulty in following the noble Lord in all the matters with which he has dealt. In view of the present state of the House, and of the Bench I see opposite, I feel some difficulty in discussing the colonial policy of Lord Granville and Lord Derby; and I do not know that, in the absence of those two noble Lords, any other occupant of the Bench opposite will care to do so. But my noble Friend is very angry with the German Government, and objects to many things which they have done. He is also angry with the German Reichstag, and objects to many things which the Members of that body have said. I have nothing to say against his taking these objections, but I must protest earnestly against the idea that I am responsible for the German Government or for the Members of the German Reichstag. The noble Lord was severe on me because he said that I misled him as to the intentions of the German Government. Well, in the first place, I would say that in furnishing my views to him as to what I thought the German Government was likely to do, I was not to be understood as entering into any pledge on behalf of the German Government or on my own behalf; and it cannot give the noble Lord any right to complain if my anticipations were not fulfilled. I was misunderstood when I talked of action on shore. I was speaking of the wider question of a military expedition into the interior. Whether bombardment is to be described as an action on sea or land is a nice question, because the shells obviously start from the sea and fall on the land; and it may, therefore, be described either way. When the noble Lord asked the question some time ago, there had already been action of this kind on the part of the German Fleet on the coast of Zanzibar, and therefore it is obvious that I could not have meant bombardment when I told him that the German Government would not take action on land. But as he holds me responsible for any forecast I may make as to the action of the German Government I will not make any more; and I will leave it to the noble Lord's imagination to fancy that the Germans are going to march across Africa, if he pleases. Whatever the German Government has done, whether good or bad, expected or unexpected, it would have been done in exactly the same manner if we had taken no action at all. The German Government is dealing with a territory under their own influence, with regard to which it has Treaty rights, and is acting within the strict limits of International Law. We have no claim to remonstrate against or to prevent its action; and we are in no way responsible for the action it has taken. We have a certain partnership with the German Government in respect to one particular matter. My noble Friend says we have come to the assistance of the German Government. I am not prepared to admit that that is a correct mode of describing the action we have taken. I should say that we have accepted the assistance of the German Government in carrying out what we have been engaged in for three-quarters of a century—namely, the suppression of the Slave Trade by sea. For that purpose we have accepted the assistance of the German Government, and it is very valuable, because it enabled us to establish this blockade of the coast by which we can stop vessels of all Flags. But beyond that strictly limited department we have no action in common with the German Government; and if they are, indeed, as my noble Friend thinks they are—I do not myself think they are—going to undertake military operations into the interior, it will in no degree concern us, and we shall not imitate them. We are not going to undertake action on land, but intend to confine ourselves to action by sea, to paralyze the Slave Trade. I am sorry my noble Friend has not had more information on these matters. Almost all the points he adverted to are dealt with in the Papers already laid on the Table; but it was not possible to get them ready for circulation in time, considering the vast amount of work which the printers' offices have to do. Of course the noble Lord is aware that before despatches are published it is necessary to consult those by whom they are written, and a considerable length of time elapses necessarily before they can be published, but I hope that the Papers which he asks for will be before Parliament in a very short period. As to Suakin, I imagine that I agree very closely with my noble Friend, but I do not know how far his view extends. I entirely agree that there should be no expedition into the desert; I agree that Suakin must not be abandoned to the Soudanese. The precise limit of the interest of Egypt in Suakin I will not discuss. When I discussed the matter before in this House, as far as I remember, I was trying to give an explanation of the grounds on which the Egyptian Government was acting, and I indicated that I thought, from their point of view at the time, they were not likely to attach much value for their own purposes to Suakin; but it is a subject on which a great many different opinions are held, according to the point of view from which the matter is looked at. And I do not think it is necessary or expedient to discuss further how far the Egyptian Government is interested in keeping Suakin. I will only say I believe that that Government and the Turkish Government, if we consulted together, would agree with us that Suakin should not be abandoned to the Soudanese. My noble Friend says you must not be satisfied with repelling attacks on Suakin, but you must make such attacks for ever impossible by negotiating with the friendly tribes. Is he not a little misled by mere words? What does he mean by negotiating with the friendly tribes? What have we to offer them? You cannot negotiate with them unless you have something to offer or something to threaten. Well, we have nothing to threaten. What have we to offer? We might offer them one thing—that is, to defend them against the dervishes; but that would involve us in an expedition into the interior—the very thing against which my noble Friend desires us to guard. No doubt you might invite the friendly tribes to come into closer connection if you extended the circle of your operation and defended a large circle around Suakin; but if you extend the circle of your defence, you must also extend the garrison and means required for that defence. You extend the cost of the measures by which that defence will be accompanied; and that will make it essential to inquire how far the return is likely to be equivalent to the great sacrifices you have been called upon to incur. My noble Friend has one simple solution of the difficulty. He says that it is a matter universally acknowledged, that the tribes detest the Egyptians and like us. I beg to withdraw my own individual unit from that universal acknowledgment. I do not know where he gets the evidence of that universal belief. I expect it is to be found chiefly in the minds of persons who, I think, assume their information on this subject very readily and very rashly. The tribes differ, I believe, very much in opinion. They differ very much in the strength of their Mahomedan fanaticism, and they do not hold the same mood from year to year or month to month; and I believe any policy founded on a belief in the permanent inclination on the part of the tribes for England rather than Egypt would be a policy based on the sands. I have only one other suggestion to offer. I do not like to dwell on it, but the importance of it my noble Friend will recognize at once—that before he recommends us to hoist the English Flag at Suakin and keep the town for ourselves, he should study the provisions of the Treaty of Paris.

THE EARL OF DUNDONALD said, he wished to refer to the question of the wounded at Suakin. While our own wounded, he was pleased to think, had all the medical attention it was possible to command, it was far otherwise with the wounded of a gallant enemy, who, probably, were scattered about the desert, or were laid in the enemy's camp, subject to the most horrible tortures under a burning sun. No one who had not seen the surroundings of the ordinary battle fields in the Soudan could adequately understand the sufferings of those wounded, who crawled under the scanty shade of a thorn tree to die in agony. A great deal might be done to alleviate the sufferings of the enemy's wounded, and to produce a friendly feeling with the Natives, if Her Majesty's Government would recommend to the Governor at Suakin that he should issue a Proclamation to the enemy informing them that their wounded, if sent into Suakin, would be cared for. It could also have no other effect than humane and beneficial, if a convoy of camels laden with lime juice, oranges, or other medical comforts for the wounded, was sent into the enemy's camp. The enemy, as we knew, were suffering great privation prior to the battles, and their wounded must be in a bad way for even the bare necessaries of life. The arrival of a few camel loads of medical comforts for the sick in their camp must tend to blunt the edge of their hatred towards the victor, and to facilitate the negotiations which he trusted would now follow. If Emin or other European prisoners were in the hands of the Mahdi, it was likely that their treatment would be favourably influenced by such conduct on our part, as it would prove to the enemy that, though England resists aggression, she acts magnanimously to the vanquished.

Motion (by leave of the House) withdrawn.

AFRICA (EQUATORIAL PROVINCES)—MR. STANLEY AND EMIN PASHA.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of SALISBURY): I have received the following telegram from Sir John Pender: "News just arrived that Stanley and Emin Pasha have arrived on the Aruwhimi. Details follow. News reliable." I cannot, of course, answer for the accuracy of this news; but at least it is as reliable as that which Osman Digna sent.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT, 1880 (CONTINUANCE) BILL.—(No. 307.)

(The Marquess of Salisbury.)

SECOND READING.

Order of the Day for the Second Reading, read.

Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª."—(The Marquess of Salisbury.)

LORD BRAMWELL said, that one reason why the working classes had so earnestly promoted Employers' Liability Bills was because they conceived that the present law inflicted an injustice upon them. They thought that that which was true of the rest of mankind was not true of them. If that were so, he would not blame them in the least for endeavouring to get the law set right; and with his whole heart he would help them if he thought so. But they were entirely wrong. He did not blame the working classes for entertaining the opinion, because they held it on the highest authority. The Master of the Rolls had told them that they were right, and that the law was unjust to them; and therefore they were perfectly warranted in getting rid of it. He differed entirely from his noble and learned Friend, and he did so with the greatest confidence. Where there was no relation or contract between a person who was injured by the negligence of another person's servant and the master, the master was liable to the person injured by the negligence of the master's servant acting within the scope of his duty. As an illustration, he mentioned the case of a coachman who, in driving, ran over, by his negligence, a person in the street, a stranger with whom the master had no contract or relation. The master in that case was liable. But when there was a contract or relation between the master and the person injured, they must look to the terms of the contract and see whether or no there was a liability. In the case of the master and his servant who was injured there was a contract—a relation between them; and they were not strangers, as in the case of the person injured in the street. All that the law said was that where a servant was injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, the relation or contract between the servant injured and the master was not such that there had been an agreement on the part of the master to compensate his servant for injuries sustained by the negligence of another servant. If a man rode in an omnibus or railway carriage and was injured by the negligence of the company's servants, he had a remedy against the company; but if a man met a friend on the road and gave him a ride gratuitously, and afterwards by the negligence of the servant of the owner the friend was injured, the latter had no remedy against the master of the servant. If a man went into a shop or an hotel, and by the negligence of the servant in the place sustained an injury, he had a remedy against the owner of the shop or the hotel. But if he went into a friend's house, and, under precisely similar circumstances, sustained an injury, he had no remedy against his friend, because it was no part of the terms of relationship between them. What the law said was that in the ordinary case of a servant, the master had not agreed with the servant to be liable for the damage done to him by a fellow-servant. The law did not say that there might not be a bargain to that effect; far from it. But it said that in the absence of any such affirmative bargain the master did not undertake to be liable for damage done by the negligence of a fellow-servant. He cared not what the law was, so long as people were allowed to make their own bargains; but to say that such bargains should not be made, that master and man could not agree for higher wages and no liability, or lower wages and liability, was preposterous.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS (Lord ESHER) said, that his noble and learned Friend had not convinced him, because he had heard his argument many times during the last 25 years. That there was any difference between his noble and learned Friend and himself as to what the law was could not be supposed. What he had stated 20 years ago, and what he still believed to hold good, was that when the law was first declared it had been declared erroneously. The law had been declared that, although the master would be liable to any stranger for the negligence of his servant, yet, if a fellow-servant were injured, there was a contract on the part of that servant who was injured that he should not claim compensation. He believed that the law had no right to imply a contract on the part of the injured servant not to claim the same compensation as a stranger might. If the master were to be liable to anyone for the negligence of a servant, why should he not be liable to a fellow-servant for that negligence? The ground of the law was that a master was liable for the negligence of a servant as if he himself were in the place and doing the act of the servant with the same negligence. If the master actually did the same negligence, no one could deny that he would be liable; but it was said that the fellow-servant had contracted himself out of the claim for compensation. There was no expression of such a contract; it was an implied contract by the law, and the law ought not to have implied it, for there was nothing to justify such implication.

LORD BRAMWELL: I said that the servant has not entered into a contract that he shall have compensation.

LORD ESHER said, that in his opinion the law, although it was the law, had originated in a mistake, and that mistake had made a difference as between fellow-workmen and other people.

LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF COMMONS' AMENDMENTS.

Commons' Amendments considered.

Moved, "That this House doth agree to the Commons' Amendments."—(The Lord Monkswell.)

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Lord KNUTSFORD) said, he desired to draw attention to the omission of Clause 9. The main argument against allowing trustees to invest in Colonial securities had been that there was no check to prevent a Colony from issuing new loans to any amount. To meet this objection an automatic clause had been prepared, and had passed in their Lordships' House. That clause in effect provided that Colonial securities could not be bought except at a certain price, but doubts had been raised as to whether that clause was sufficient in its terms. There was not time to consider those objections fully; but, at the same time, as the other clauses of the Bill were of very great importance to trustees, it had been thought best not to let the Bill drop. It had, therefore, been dedecided to omit Clause 9. It would, however, be a great mistake to suppose that any reflection was cast upon Colonial securities by this action; and, indeed, the market price of those securities was a sufficient answer to any such supposition. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in the other House had expressed a strong hope that no such doubt would be thrown upon Colonial securities by this action, and he also had expressed a hope, in which he (Lord Knutsford) heartily joined, that before next Session some solution would be found by which the difficulty with regard to Colonial securities might be removed.

UNITED STATES (RECALL OF LORD SACKVILLE).

QUESTION. OBSERVATIONS.

THE EARL OF DUNRAVEN rose to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, When it was intended to appoint a Minister to the United States? In putting this Question he did not desire to enter into the circumstances which led to the departure of our late Minister at Washington. That was an incident that, in the interests of both nations, had better be forgotten as soon as possible. He regretted, however, that it had so far been found impossible by Her Majesty's Government to present Papers to Parliament on the subject. He still hoped that they might be presented before the Prorogation. The Prime Minister not long ago alluded to this matter at the Guildhall, and suggested that the action of the President was not approved by the American people. It was well known that the people of America were sensitive—he might say extra sensitive—as to the opinion of the Prime Minister and as to the opinions of the people of this country. Whether there was any blame in the matter, whether any one was to blame, and whether our late Minister acted in any way which was unjustifiable, was beside the point; but it was desirable that both the English and the American people should have correct information on the subject. His point, however, was not whether or not the British Minister was guilty of conduct which justified the action of the American Government. He desired to urge that a Minister ought to be appointed as soon as possible. Though diplomatically speaking the United States was a foreign country, still our relations with them were quite different to our relations with other countries, and we did not regard its inhabitants as foreign in the ordinary acceptation of the word. Inhabitants of the two countries could each understand in a way that others could not the exigencies of Party feeling, and could make allowances for each other in that respect. Any ill-feeling or misunderstanding between the two countries would be greatly deplored. The first duty of this country was towards the Empire and India; and, secondly, towards the United States; and it was our bounden duty to do everything that we could, and make any sacrifice that could be made without dishonour, to create and maintain good feelings between the two countries. Owing to the change of Government in the United States Mr. Phelps would soon be leaving England, and it might be, if the appointment of a Minister to Washington were further delayed, that the delay might be taken by the people of the United States as intended as a punishment for what had occurred in the case of the late Minister, or that they might retaliate by delaying the appointment of a Minister to London, the result of which would be very much like a suspension of diplomatic relations. At the present time there were special reasons for desiring a good understanding between this country and the United States, for there were two important international questions pending for settlement with regard to the Fishery question and the Extradition Treaty, and these could only be settled by mutual amity. Upon these grounds he thought he was justified in saying that it was desirable that no cause of offence should be allowed to exist between the two countries, and that any honourable sacrifice should be made to avoid such a state of things. He hoped that the Prime Minister would assure the House that a Minister would be appointed to Washington without delay.

THE PRIME MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS (The Marquess of SALISBURY) I told my noble Friend privately that the Correspondence on this subject was incomplete, and, therefore, according to the uniform usage, I can say nothing on the subject. It is also the usage in regard to appointments of this kind made by the Executive Government for Parliament to express, if necessary, its judgment upon such appointments after they have been made, but not to require information beforehand as to the intentions of the Government. On both these grounds I shall leave the responsibility for introducing this subject with the noble Earl, and I must respectfully ask the House to excuse me from making any statement on the subject.

House adjourned at a quarter past Six o'clock, till To-morrow, a quarter past Eleven o'clock, p.m.

QUESTION.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW—BREAKING UP OF A VAULT IN HEMEL HEMPSTEAD CHURCH.

MR. HALLEY STEWART (Lincolnshire, Spalding) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he has now received further representations relative to the desecration of the vault of the Combe family in Hemel Hempstead Church, to the effect that the coffins were removed and broken up, and the lead sent away by railway, the remains in such coffins being placed in a hole in the churchyard; whether an official inquiry into the facts of the case has been asked for by a descendant of the Combe family; and, if so, whether such inquiry will be instituted?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): Yes, Sir. I have received the representations mentioned in this Question from a person claiming to descend from the Combe family. The circumstances referred to by the complainant are, however, disputed by the incumbent. If there has been, in fact, a removal of remains such as is complained of, I may point out that there is a legal remedy by summary proceedings prescribed by Statute. If an ecclesiastical offence has been committed, the matter is for the Ordinary, who, I learn, is making inquiry. Therefore, I do not propose to take any action.

THE AUSTRALASIAN COLONIES—THE MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT.

MR. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether any of the Australasian Governments have adopted the provisions of the Merchandise Marks Act; and whether the Colony of New South Wales has yet signified its intention of doing so?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Baron HENRY DE WORMS) (Liverpool, East Toxteth): In answer to the right hon. Gentleman, I have to state that all these Colonies have promised legislation, except New South Wales, from which no despatch has yet been received; but the Colonial Acts of the Session have not yet arrived.

MR. MUNDELLA asked, whether the hon. Gentleman would inquire the reason why New South Wales had sent no response to the Circular?

BARON HENRY DE WORMS replied that he would do so.

EDUCATION, SCIENCE AND ART—GRANTS IN AID TO PROVINCIAL COLLEGES.

MR. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, If he is now able to remove the uncertainty and embarrassment of the Provincial Colleges, by publishing his scheme for Grants in Aid; and, whether, in consideration of the delay which has already taken place, and the pecuniary position of several Colleges, he will provide that the grants shall take effect from the 1st of January next?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): I am not yet able to make any statement as to the particulars of a scheme for Grants in Aid to University Colleges in the Provinces. In any case, it would not be possible for the grants to take effect from the 1st of January next, as they will be included in the Estimates for the financial year 1889-90, which does not commence till the 31st of March, nor can the grants be of such amounts as to retrieve the position of any College which is in serious financial embarrassment. Government grants, though they will be a valuable addition, can in no case be, and are not intended to be, an effective substitute for local contributions, which must always bear the greater share of the burden. With respect to the scheme in general, I am anxious to state that any delay which has arisen is due entirely to the number and importance of the subjects competing for the attention of the Government during the present Session. We regard grants to Local Colleges as a step of great importance, and possibly of far-reaching effects. It was absolutely impossible to propose a scheme without the most careful consideration of its bearings, more especially the proportions in which and the conditions on which any assistance from Imperial funds should be given to Local Institutions for higher class education. It is not from any neglect of the matter, but rather from our sense of its extreme importance, that we have not yet been able to formulate our proposal, although we hope to do so at a very early date.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT — BOARD SCHOOL, QUADRING FEN, LINCOLNSHIRE.

MR. HALLEY STEWART (Lincolnshire, Spalding) asked the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education, Whether the Order excluding boys over 10 years of age from the Board School, Quadring Fen, Lincolnshire, was made from any inability on the part of the mistress to keep boys over 10 years of age under control; whether he is aware that the schoolmistress has 50 pupils under her sole control without the help of an assistant or pupil teacher; whether the Order made, excluding boys over 10 years of age, is due to the large number of scholars in the care of the mistress; and, whether he will urge the School Board to provide such teaching assistance to the mistress that the School may be opened again to the excluded boys resident near the school?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. STUART-WORTLEY) (Sheffield, Hallam) (who replied) said: My right hon. Friend the Vice President desires me to say that the hon. Member makes it necessary to repeat for the third time that the main reason for the exclusion of these boys was the difficulty the teacher had in keeping them under proper control; but there was an absolute necessity to reduce the number in any case, as the school only accommodates 42 children, and last year there were more than 41 in average attendance.

JAMAICA — PURCHASE OF THE GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

MR. KELLY (Camberwell, N.) (for Sir GEORGE BADEN-POWELL) (Liverpool, Kirkdale) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether he can now state the terms that have been offered by the New York Syndicate for the purchase of the Jamaica Government Railways; whether it is open to the public to tender for the purchase of those railways; and, whether Her Majesty's Government, in the event of sale, will only accept payment either in cash or in bonds, or shares, enjoying absolute priority of lien on the railway property?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Baron HENRY DE WORMS) (Liverpool, East Toxteth): The proposals that have been made are being considered; and they cannot now be stated. This answer must be taken to cover the remaining parts of my hon. Friend's Question.

METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE EXPENDITURE—INITIATION OF POLICE RECEIVER.

MR. KELLY (Camberwell, N.) (for Sir GEORGE BADEN-POWELL) (Liverpool, Kirkdale) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he can state for how long

"all proposals involving police expenditure, except as to repairs to stations, have been initiated by the Chief Commissioner of Police;"

whether the late Commissioner made strong recommendations to the effect that the Police Receiver should cease to initiate expenditure in regard to stores and buildings; and, whether the Secretary of State declined at the time to accept those recommendations; and, if so, at what date, and for what reason, were those recommendations subsequently accepted?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): The practice as to the police expenditure, which I described generally in answer to my hon. Friend on the 3rd instant, has been in existence for very many years. The late Commissioner made various recommendations from time to time, to the effect that economy would result from giving to the Commissioner the initiative as to the repair of stations, and greater control over the contracts and other financial arrangements made by the Receiver. All these recommendations, and the whole subject of the relations between the Commissioner and Receiver, were referred by the Secretary of State to examination by a Committee, of which my hon. Friend is aware, and, pending the inquiry, the old practice has been continued. The subject is too complex to be adequately explained by Questions and answers in this House.

INCOME TAX—REPAYMENT OF OVERPAID TAX.

MR. KELLY (Camberwell, N.) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether any reason exists why claimants who have appeared before the Income Tax Commissioners, and have obtained, by the production of their accounts for the three years, a reduction in the assessment of the profits of their profession or trade for the current year, should not, in view of the fact that the decisions are absolutely final, and, also, that claimants in such cases must necessarily have been put to great inconvenience, trouble, and loss of time, be entitled, ipso facto, to relief and repayment of overpaid tax for the previous year, in accordance with the provisions of sec. 133 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, as amended by sec. 6 of 28 & 29 Vict. c. 30; whether, in many such cases, the General Commissioners express the opinion that such claimants ought not to be compelled to come before them a second time, nor be called upon to prove the same thing twice over; but that it is in the discretion of the Surveyor of Taxes to refuse to give effect to such recommendations, on the ground of the claimants having appealed under one section of the Act and not another; and, whether he would consider whether it would be in the public interest that the Board of Inland Revenue should instruct Surveyors of Taxes not to resist the refunding of overpaid tax for the previous year in any case where a claimant has proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioners for Special Purposes, or the Commissioners for General Purposes, that he is entitled to a decreased assessment, and has obtained such decreased assessment for the current year?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): In reply to the first part of the hon. Member's Question, I have to inform him that it need not follow that a person is entitled to a reduction in the assessment for the past year because he is allowed a reduction for the current year. To establish a claim for reduction for the present year, he must first give notice of appeal and then produce his accounts, and prove to the Commissioners, during the autumn of this year, that the sum assessed exceeds his average annual profits for the last three years; his assessment would then be reduced to the amount of that average. But to establish a similar claim for last year he must first give his notice of appeal as soon after the 5th of April this year as can reasonably be expected, and then prove that the assessment exceeded his actual profits during last year; and he would then be entitled to have it reduced either to the amount of those profits, or to the amount of his average annual profits for the last three years, including the year of assessment, whichever amount is the greater. But if last year's profits were not less than the sum assessed he has no right of appeal, even though the average profits may have been less. With regard to the last two paragraphs of the hon. Member's Question, I would state that no such expression of opinion on the part of the General Commissioners as that quoted has been brought to the notice of the Board of Inland Revenue; but, should a case occur, the Surveyor would be instructed to raise no objection on the grounds stated, provided that the accounts produced by the claimant were satisfactory.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION — FAIR RENTS—LORD CASTLETOWN'S ESTATE.

MR. KILBRIDE (Kerry, S.) asked Mr. Solicitor General for Ireland, Whether he is aware that, although a large number of tenants on the estate of Lord Castletown in Upper Ossory served originating notices with a view to having fair rents fixed two years ago last November, the cases are still unheard; can he state when it is likely that the Court will be able to adjudicate upon them; and, what is the cause of the delay?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University): The Land Commissioners report that the number of cases remaining unheard is 42. It is intended that a Sub-Commission shall sit in the Union of Urlingford about the month of March, when such of the cases referred to as are situated in that union will appear in the list. The delay arose through the necessity of taking the unions in rotation.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE (IRELAND) ACT, 1887—ARREST OF FATHER KENNEDY, MEELIN CO.

MR. FLYNN (Cork, N.) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, If he is aware that in connection with the imprisonment of Father Kennedy, Meelin, last August, the police, previous to the arrest, served the reverend gentleman with a notification from the Exchequer Court, signed by an official of that Court, to the effect that the Court, having heard the arguments in his case, gave judgment that the sentence of the Lower Court should stand confirmed; can he state why a similar notification from the Court was not served upon Father Kennedy by the police authorities in connection with the second case previous to his recent arrest; and, if it is necessary that such official notification should be served, why did the police authorities depart from the procedure observed upon the previous occasion?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said: The Constabulary authorities report that it is the case that a notification from the Exchequer Court was served previous to the first arrest; also that no similar notice was served on the second occasion, inasmuch as none was received by them for service. I may add that in neither case was there any legal necessity for such a notice.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (IRELAND)—JAMES ADAMS, RATE COLLECTOR—TULLYHOGUE ELECTORAL DIVISION.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether a Memorial has been lodged with the Local Government Board, protesting against the appointment of James Adams as rate collector for the Electoral Division of Tullyhogue, in the Poor Law Union of Cookstown; whether James Adams has acted as official objector at the Revision Courts in East Tyrone, on behalf of the Unionist Party, for several years past; if it is the fact that ex officio Guardians, who had not attended the meetings of the Board for three years previously, were present at this election of rate collector and voted for Mr. Adams, and that the elected Guardians, with the exception of three, voted for William Parks, the other candidate, who is a Presbyterian and a ratepayer, residing in the Division; whether James Adams resides in the Division, or is a ratepayer; and, whether, under the circumstances, the Local Government Board will refuse to sanction his appointment?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said, The reply to the inquiry in the first paragraph is in the affirmative. Mr. Adams has not acted in the capacity mentioned in the second paragraph for the last three or four years; but he did act in the capacity formerly. It is not the fact that the ex officio Guardians, who had not attended for the three years previously, attended on this occasion and voted for Mr. Adams; nor does the statement in the Question correctly represent the Guardians as voting for the other candidate. Mr. Adams resides about three miles outside the district, and he is not a ratepayer; but there is no Regulation requiring the person appointed to be a ratepayer; and the Local Government Board see no reason to refuse to sanction the appointment made by the Board of Guardians.

POST OFFICE—PARCEL POST—EXTENSION TO UNITED STATES.

MR. ROWNTREE (Scarborough) asked the Postmaster General, If he would consider the practicability of extending the advantages of the Parcel Post to the Postal Service between this country and the United States of America?

THE POSTMASTERGENERAL (Mr. RAIKES) (Cambridge University): With the exception of the United States, there is now no civilized and scarcely any uncivilized country which has not the advantage of the Parcel Post. I can assure the hon. Member that I am fully alive to the importance of extending the Parcel Post to the United States, and I have lost no opportunity of pressing the question upon the attention of the United States Post Office. The difficulty hitherto has been that American law stood in the way; and in the hope of being able to make some temporary arrangement, short of an actual Convention, an officer of my Department was some time ago sent specially to New York and Washington to collect information. Recent circumstances have led me to believe that the difficulty in American law which barred the way to a Convention may have been overcome; and the hon. Member may rest satisfied that I will avail myself of the first occasion which presents itself of again pressing my proposals for the extension of the Parcel Post to the United States.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT — RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION AT SHEEPWASH, NORTH DEVON.

MR. COURTNEY KENNY (York, W.R., Barnsley) asked the Vice President of the Committee of Council on Education, Whether he is aware that in the elementary public school at Sheepwash, North Devon, the vicar, when giving religious instruction to the children, is in the habit of teaching them that it is a sin to attend public worship elsewhere than in the Established Church, that Nonconformist ministers have no right to preach, and that baptisms by such ministers are invalid; whether, owing to there being no other school within reach of the village, the vicar has been requested by the parents of some of the children to discontinue such teaching, but has declined to do so; whether such teaching is permitted by the Education Department in a village school which the children of Nonconformists are compelled by law to attend; and, whether the Education Department will inquire into the circumstances of this case?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. STUART WORTLEY) (Sheffield, Hallam) (who replied) said: My right hon. Friend the Vice President desires me to say that it is expressly laid down in the Statute that it is no part of the duty of the Department to inquire into any instruction in religious subjects; but every parent has the right of withdrawing a child from such instruction, and if any infringement of that right is reported to the Department it will be dealt with at once.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION—SALE OF THE VERNER AND GREVILLE ESTATES.

MR. MAHONY (Meath, N.) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether he will lay upon the Table of the House the correspondence between Mr. J. A. O'Sullivan, Solicitor for the Trustees of the Verner Estate and the Land Commission, relative to the Circular issued to the tenants by Mr. O'Sullivan; whether it is a fact that the Greville Estate has been sold to the tenants, Mr. O'Sullivan acting for the landlord; and, whether Mr. O'Sullivan accepted promissory notes from the tenants on this estate in payment of rent due, so as to enable them to show a clear receipt to the Land Commissioners?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said: There is no objection to lay upon the Table a copy of the Correspondence referred to, beyond the inconvenience of multiplying Parliamentary Returns; but I shall be happy to let the hon. Member see it if he so desires. The Land Commissioners are not aware whether Mr. O'Sullivan has been concerned in the negotiation for the sale to the tenants on the Greville Estate, nor that he accepted promissory notes from the tenants in payment of rent due; but the deeds of conveyance released all such rents, pursuant to rule.

MR. CLANCY (Dublin Co., N.) asked if the hon. and learned Gentleman thought it was the duty of the Commissioners to inquire whether the promissory notes had been given?

MR. MADDEN said, it was not for him to advise the Commissioners, particularly as there was a case affecting promissory notes now pending.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.) asked the hon. and learned Gentleman to lay the Correspondence on the Table, so that hon. Members could form their own judgment on the matter.

MR. MADDEN promised to consider that.

SALES OF CATTLE BY LIVE WEIGHT—RETURN.

MR. MAHONY (Meath, N.) asked the President of the Board of Trade,

Whether sales of cattle by live weight, and sales after cattle have been weighed, have considerably increased in number during the past two months in Aberdeen, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dublin, Newcastle, Liverpool, and Islington; and, whether he can now say when he will issue to Members the first Return of such sales?

THE PRESIDENT (Sir MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH) (Bristol, W.): I have caused inquiries to be made of the clerks of the different markets. The result is that the practice of sales by weight or sales after weighing has been introduced; but at most of the markets named there are still few such sales, and in one or two none are reported. The practice cannot be said to have increased to a considerable extent generally in the last two months, though it appears to be making progress. At Liverpool the number of cattle weighed has increased considerably, and the sales of cattle by live weight have also increased. At Islington a commencement was made two months ago, and altogether about 400 beasts have been weighed there, the weekly numbers being, on an average, about 90 in the last three weeks. At Dublin the number of beasts weighed has increased from 715 to 748, comparing the eight weeks ending the 18th of October with the eight weeks ending the 13th of December. The Board of Trade hope to publish some information of the description referred to in the latter part of the hon. Member's Question in the Return which has been agreed to on the Motion of the hon. Member for Shropshire.

CEYLON—BUDDHIST TEMPORALITIES.

MR. W. A. M'ARTHUR (Cornwall, Mid, St. Austell) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether his attention has been drawn to a Draft Ordinance brought in in the Legislative Council of Ceylon by the Government of Ceylon, dealing with Buddhist temporalities, as stated in The Daily News of December 18; whether this provides, among other objects, for the maintenance of Buddhist services, rites, processions, and buildings; whether the said temporalities are to be vested in certain Trust Bodies, who will be compelled to keep their accounts subject to the direction and under the control of Commissioners appointed by and responsible to Her Majesty's District Judges; whether it is true, as reported in The Ceylon Observer, that the Governor has publicly intimated that the Draft Ordinance has been already approved by the Secretary of State; and, whether there is any special reason for this course being taken?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Baron HENRY DE WORMS) (Liverpool, East Toxteth): A Draft Ordinance has been brought in by the Government of Ceylon in the Legislative Council dealing with Buddhist temporalities, which provides, among other objects, for the maintenance out of the property belonging to the Buddhist temples of Buddhist services, rites, processions, and buildings. The Draft Ordinance proposes to vest the temporalities in Trustees, whose accounts will be audited by persons appointed by the District Courts; and the District Courts will be empowered to prescribe the form in which such accounts are to be kept. The policy of this Ordinance was referred to at great length by Sir Arthur Gordon in his speech opening the Legislative Council on the 31st of October. He explained that the measure is an attempt to carry out the principles laid down by his predecessor, Sir J. Longden, and by Lords Kimberley and Derby; and stated that the draft had received the approval of Her Majesty's Government. It is not unusual for the Governor of a Crown Colony to obtain the approval of the Secretary of State before introducing an important Draft Ordinance, and to inform the Legislative Council of the fact.

EVICTIONS (IRELAND) — ALLEGED OUTRAGE AT CLONDULANE.

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether his attention has been called to the report that, at the eviction of William O'Connell, at Clondulane, on the 18th instant, a Mrs. Ryan, who was present, on laughing at a jesting remark made on the police, was caught by the hair by one of the constables and dragged about; and, if this report is true, whether steps will be immediately taken to punish the policeman in question?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said: The Constabulary authorities reported that the allegations contained in this Question had no foundation whatever in fact.

DR. TANNER: Is it not a fact that this poor, unfortunate woman had a handful of hair pulled out of her head by a brutal constable?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO WORKMEN BILL—INSURANCE FUND FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYES.

MR. AIRD (Paddington, N.) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If he will, during the Recess, consider the desirability of introducing a clause in the Employers' Liability for Injuries to Workmen Bill, to be introduced next Session, requiring the Government to institute an Insurance Fund for all Government employés, whether attached or otherwise (to which fund the Government should contribute), so as to secure provision in case of continued illness, and provision for the family in case of death?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): The subject mentioned by my hon. Friend is one of much interest, and I shall have much pleasure in considering it; but I do not think it will be desirable to make any exceptional provisions for Government employés in the Employers' Liability for Injuries to Workmen Bill.

ARMY—THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

MR. WEBSTER (St. Pancras, E.) asked the Secretary of State for War, If he can inform the House the reasons which led to the disarmament of the Honourable Artillery Company?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): I gave a full explanation and answer to this Question yesterday. No inquiry was necessary into the reasons which led to the disarmament of the Honourable Artillery Company. The War Office is fully aware of the cause; and I explained yesterday the reason which led to that disarmament.

MR. WEBSTER asked the right hon. Gentleman, whether he had had an interview that day with members of the Honourable Artillery Company; and whether he was in a position to give the House any information on the subject?

MR. E. STANHOPE: It is true I did receive a deputation to-day of members of the Honourable Artillery Company; but I do not think that the interests of the Service would be promoted by my giving the House any details of what took place.

IRISH LAND COMMISSION—SITTING OF A SUB-COMMISSION AT EDENDERRY.

DR. FOX (King's Co., Tullamore) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether he will arrange for a Land Sub-Commission to sit at Edenderry to hear the large number of cases listed in that and the surrounding districts?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said: The Land Commissioners report that a Sub-Commission will commence its sittings at Navan on the 9th of January, for the County Meath, and will probably reach the union of Edenderry about Easter.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888—THE COUNTY COUNCIL—QUALIFICATION OF CANDIDATES.

MR. T. E. ELLIS (Merionethshire) asked the President of the Local Government Board, Whether a Registrar and High Bailiff of a County Court is eligible as a candidate for the County Council?

THE PRESIDENT (Mr. RITCHIE) (Tower Hamlets, St. George's), in reply, said, it would be inadvisable for him to advise as to the qualifications of candidates for the County Council. The disqualifications were set forth in Section 12 of the Municipal Corporations Act. His private opinion was that the Registrar of a County Court was not legally ineligible.

COAL MINES REGULATION—THE HARGREAVES EXECUTORS' BURNLEY WEIGHING CASE (APPEAL.)

MR. SLAGG (Burnley) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether he can give any information as to the continued delay in the hearing of the Hargreaves Executors' Burnley Weighing Case (Appeal); whether he is aware that during this delay the miners of Burnley are deprived of the right enjoyed by other miners in Lancashire of having their coal weighed; and, whether he can give any definite information as to when the case will be heard?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): I am informed by the Treasury Solicitor that, the parties having been unable to agree, instructions were given on November 23 to have the draft case settled by the Justices. I certainly hope that these initial proceedings will not be farther protracted, and that the case may be heard during the next sittings. It cannot be heard before.

RULES OF DEBATE—QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

MR. H. S. WRIGHT (Nottingham, S.) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether Her Majesty's Government will consider the advisability of proposing early next Session some method of reducing the number of Questions to be asked and answered vivâ voce in the House, either by having all Questions and their answers printed, and allowing no individual Member more than a fixed number of vivâ voce Questions during each Session, or by some other method?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) St. George's, Hanover Square): In reply to the hon. Member I beg to say that I can give him no opinion on behalf of Her Majesty's Government with regard to the course which he proposes in his Question; but I am quite sure that the object of reducing the enormous number of Questions which are now asked, and which absorb so large a portion of the time of the House, will have the sympathy, not only of the Members of the Government, but of a very large proportion of the Members of the House itself.

THE HIGHLANDS AND ISLANDS OF SCOTLAND—THE SPECIAL GRANT OF £30,000.

MR. FRASER-MACKINTOSH (Inverness-shire) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether he could state, for the information of the districts concerned, on what principle and basis is it proposed to allocate the special Grant in Aid of £30,000 to the Highlands and Islands of Scotland?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND (Mr. M. T. STORMONTH DARLING) (Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities) (who replied) said: In the event of the Probate Duties (Scotland and Ireland) Bill becoming law, the principle on which it is proposed to allocate the special grant of £30,000 is to divide the parishes in the counties specified in the Bill into four classes, according to the proportion between the rateable value and the population of each. In this way the poorer parishes will receive the larger share of the grant. In certain cases, where the Parochial Boards are in default of payment to the School Boards, it may be necessary to devote the money to aid in meeting their obligations in that respect; and, in addition, a small proportion of the £30,000 may be excluded from the division, and assigned directly to meet exceptional cases of educational difficulty.

DR. CLARK (Caithness): Are we to understand that the money is to go to education?

MR. M. T. STORMONTH DARLING: Not entirely.

ARMY—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS—ERRORS IN EXAMINATION PAPERS.

MR. HUBBARD (Bucks, N.) asked the Secretary to the Treasury, Whether, in the Army Preliminary Examination, on 13th December, Question 5 was set in the Algebra Paper, which is incapable of solution—

"Write down all the seven factors common to $xy\,(x^4-16)\,(y^2-9)$ and $x4\,(x+4)\,(y-3)$;"

why Question 12 was set in the Arithmetic Paper—

"If 1 cubic foot = ·028 cubic metre, and if 1 kilogram = 2·2 lbs., find the number of ounces in 1 cubic foot of water"— a knowledge of the metric system not being required by the syllabus; and, if his attention has been drawn to the two letters in The Standard newspaper, of 18th December, signed by "C. C. T. P." and John H. Robson, which seem to throw doubt on the accuracy of Algebra Question No. 5, and on the suitability of the whole Algebra Paper for a preliminary examination?

THE SECRETARY (Mr. JACKSON) (Leeds, N.): In the earlier part of Question 5 candidates were asked to define a factor; and I am informed that, according to the correct definition of a factor, there are seven factors common to the two expressions. As regards Question 12 of the Arithmetical Paper, I am informed that there is no such syllabus as is implied in the hon. Member's Question, and that the metrical system is included in the well-known text-book, Colenso's Arithmetic. A general statement is made as to the knowledge of arithmetic required from candidates; but the strict interpretation of it desired by the hon. Member would exclude a knowledge of the English as well as of the metrical system of weights and measures. The hon. Member has kindly forwarded me the letters from The Standard to which he refers; but I do not think I need comment on them, as, so far as I can see, they answer each other.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888—COUNTY COUNCILS—CANDIDATURE OF CIVIL SERVANTS.

MR. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, When the Treasury Minute respecting the candidature of Civil servants for County Councils will be issued; and, whether similar Minutes will be issued as regards officers of the Army and Navy?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): The Minute in question was issued two days ago. It is not for me to decide whether similar Minutes should be issued as regards officers of the Army and Navy?

MR. PICKERSGILL asked the Secretary of State for War, whether he proposed to issue a similar Circular affecting officers in the Army?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle) said, it was exceedingly desirable that any step taken in this matter with regard to officers in the Army should be similar to that taken with regard to officers in the Navy. He had not had an opportunity of consulting his noble Friend the First Lord of the Admiralty; but, so far as he was concerned, he would be very glad if it were possible to agree with him to issue an Order prohibiting officers on full pay from serving as members of County Councils.

NAVY—ROYAL NAVAL RESERVE—CERTIFICATES OF SERVICE.

MR. ROWNTREE (Scarborough) asked the President of the Board of Trade, If it will be practicable to include in the certificate of service granted to men of the Royal Naval Reserve who have served their full time, an endorsement of character as reported from time to time by the Drill Instructors, and similar to that given to seamen leaving the Royal Navy, in order to assist men of good character in obtaining employment ashore when no longer able on account of age to follow their calling at sea?

THE PRESIDENT (Sir MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH) (Bristol, W.): I will at once direct communications to be made to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty on the subject, with a view to considering whether the suggestion made by the hon. Member can be carried into effect.

AFRICA (WEST COAST)—THE GOLD COAST GRUSHI SLAVES.

MR. SYDNEY BUXTON (Tower Hamlets, Poplar) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether the Government of the Gold Coast has given bounties to the owners of Grushi slaves on condition that the said slaves would enlist as soldiers in the service of the Colony; whether the Governor of the Gold Coast, in reply to a question by one of his officers, said—"Bring me the men, that is all you have to understand;" whether a British officer in March last forcibly seized a number of Grushis outside the British frontier, and without attesting them brought them down to the Gold Coast Protectorate to serve for a term of years in the Constabulary Force; whether 100 lashes were inflicted upon certain constabulary men by a junior officer, without making the required entries in the regimental defaulters' sheet, and without reporting to the officer in command?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Baron HENRY DE WORMS) (Liverpool, East Toxteth): (1.) The Governor has reported that some Grushis, who were fugitives from Ashantee, have been enlisted to serve in the Gold Coast Constabulary; and that the usual bounties were paid to the chiefs of the country in which they were living. (2.) The remark attributed to the Governor is absolutely inconsistent with the orders given by him to the recruiting officer; and it is impossible to believe that he made it. (3.) This Question must refer to the same Grushis as the first Question. They were not seized forcibly; but the conditions of their proposed employment were carefully explained to them before they left Kratchie, and again on their arriving at Accra; and they all agreed to serve in the constabulary, except two men as to whose wishes there was some doubt. (4.) No information has been received with regard to this last question; but inquiry will be made.

ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY—THE POLICE AT NAAS.

MR. CAREW (Kildare, N.) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether his attention has been called to the Resolution which was passed at a meeting of the inhabitants of Naas on the 12th instant, demanding a sworn inquiry into the conduct of the officers responsible for the attack by the police on the people on the evening of the 3rd instant; and, if so, what steps he intends to take in the matter?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said, the Resolution had been referred to the authorities in Ireland for a Report, which had not yet been received.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT (SCOTLAND)—SCHOOL BOARD OF BARVAS (HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND).

MR. CALDWELL (Glasgow, St. Rollox) asked the Lord Advocate, Whether it is the case that the rateable value of the parish of Barvas, in the Highlands of Scotland, amounts to only £2,908, whilst the population numbers 5,325; whether the school rate is 5*s.* 4*d.* per £1 of the rateable value; as much as 4*s.* 3*d.* per £1 being required to meet the charges of the building account; whether he is aware that the Parochial Board has declined to assess for a higher school rate than 1*s.* per £1 of rental, which brings in only £145, as against £1,100, the estimated expenditure for the current year, and that a young lady teacher has been put out of her lodgings owing to her inability to pay them, the inability being caused by her not having received a single penny of salary since the 15th of May last; how long these facts have been known to the Scotch Education Department; whether the members of the School Board have all resigned; and, what steps the Scotch Education Department propose to take to carry on the work of education in Barvas Parish?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND (Mr. M. T. STORMONTH DARLING) (Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities) (who replied) said: The facts stated by the hon. Member with regard to the rateable value, population, and amount of school-rate are, so far as the Scottish Education Department are aware, generally correct, although they are not prepared to pledge themselves as to the amount of the rate required for the special expenses referred to. The position of matters has been known to them, and has been under their careful consideration for some time. They have received no information with regard to the alleged resignation of the School Board of Barvas, or the facts stated with respect to the teacher referred to. The Scotch Education Department are in communication with the School Board in question and others similarly situated, and have completed proposals for dealing with the difficulties, which are now being submitted to these School Boards.

DR. CLARK (Caithness) asked the Solicitor General, if he was also aware that the neighbouring parishes of Lochs and Uig were in the same position? He would further like to know by what means the Education Commissioners would know that these School Boards resigned?

MR. M. T. STORMONTH DARLING said, with regard to the latter part of the Question, it was obvious that the School Boards might intimate their resignation to the Scotch Education Department; and that they had not yet done so. With regard to the former part of the Question, undoubtedly the position of these other School Boards which the hon. Member referred to was known to be serious, and was in the full view of the Education Department.

LAW AND JUSTICE (IRELAND)—RIOT AT MACROOM — TRIAL AT CORK WINTER ASSIZES.

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether on the recent trial of the man Lucy and four others, at the Cork Winter Assizes, on a charge of riot at Macroom, on the 18th of October last, the jury acquitted Lucy, and found his original arrest, out of which the riot arose, to have been unjustifiable; whether his attention has been called to the fact that in convicting the other prisoners the jury unanimously recommended them to mercy, expressly on the ground of the illegality of Lucy's arrest, and that the Lord Chief Baron promised to give effect to the recommendation of the jury; and, whether any steps will be taken against the policeman whose unjustifiable action in arresting Lucy led to the disturbance?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University (who replied) said: I am informed that the jury, in acquitting Lucy, expressed no ground, so far as can be ascertained, for their action. It is not the fact that the jury based their recommendation to mercy in the case of the other prisoners on the ground alleged in the Question. On the contrary, they stated that they did so on the ground that the attack on the police was unpremeditated. It is the case that the Lord Chief Baron said that the recommendation would have due weight with him. That the attack on the police was a serious one is evident from the fact that, notwithstanding this recommendation, the sentence inflicted was in the case of one of the prisoners six months' imprisonment with hard labour, and in the case of each of the three others, three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888 — COUNTY COUNCILLORS AND ELECTION AGENTS.

MR. P. STANHOPE (Wednesbury) asked Mr. Attorney General, Whether candidates for the County Council may appoint and remunerate election agents?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL (Sir EDWARD CLARKE) (Plymouth) (who replied) said, the Question was not altogether free from difficulty; but the better opinion was that candidates for the County Council might appoint election agents, but were not allowed to pay them anything whatever.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888—REGISTER OF COUNTY ELECTORS.

MR. LAWSON (St. Pancras, W.) asked the Government whether, in some parts of the Metropolis, the Register of County Council electors was being issued separately from the Parliamentary list, causing double expense to those who wished to possess both; and whether this was not contrary to the arrangement which had been come to on the subject?

MR. RITCHIE asked for Notice of the Question.

ARMY — THE BATTLE AT SUAKIN — THE BROKEN SWORDS OF THE 20TH HUSSARS.

GENERAL GOLDSWORTHY (Hammersmith) asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether it was true, as reported, that in the charge of the Hussars against the rebels at Suakin on Thursday three of the Hussars' swords broke short; and whether, if so, he would cause inquiry to be made into the matter?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): Certainly, Sir; inquiry will be made into that statement, which has reached me through the kindness of my hon. and gallant Friend, who handed me the extract from the newspapers.

SAVINGS BANK RULES.

MR. HOWELL (Bethnal Green, N.E.) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether he was aware that serious inconvenience had arisen, and was likely to arise, in consequence of the new Rule of the Savings Bank, which required the whole of the Trustees to sign the form of withdrawal of money, whereas hitherto it had been sufficient if two or three signed; and whether action would be taken, in conjunction with the Post Office authorities, so as to prevent such inconvenience in the future?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square), in reply, said, he had no knowledge of the Rule to which the hon. Member referred; but he would not fail to make inquiries at once.

AFRICA (EAST COAST)—EXECUTIONS AT ZANZIBAR.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL (Kirkcaldy, &c.): I wish to ask the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a Question which I think he can answer without notice. It is, whether it is true that the Sultan of Zanzibar has gone off his head?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Sir JAMES FERGUSSON) (Manchester, N.E.): I have already stated that the Sultan of Zanzibar had entered on a course of conduct of which Her Majesty's Government disapproved. From what cause that course of conduct originates is a matter of conjecture.

EGYPT—THE OPERATIONS AT SUAKIN.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth) asked the Secretary of State for War, Whether he could confirm the news which came from Egypt this morning that the British troops return to Suakin forthwith, and that nothing more was to be done?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. E. STANHOPE) (Lincolnshire, Horncastle): I confess I have not seen that statement in the papers this morning.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON: It is in The Times.

MR. CREMER (Shoreditch, Haggerston): I wish to ask the Secretary of State for War, Whether he has any further information to impart to the House with reference to the operations before Suakin; and, I also desire to ask the total number of British and Egyptian troops either killed and wounded, and the number of troops—rebels as they are called—that have been killed and wounded; and, whether there are any more "glad tidings of great joy" to impart to the House this Session?

MR. MUNDELLA (Sheffield, Brightside): Before the right hon. Gentleman answers the Question, I wish to ask, Whether there is any truth in the statement that appears in the Papers that the troops are about to proceed to Handoub?

MR. E. STANHOPE: I have not seen any such report in the newspapers. And with regard to the Question of the hon. Member, I can only say I have not received any further news whatever from Suakin this day; and all the news as to the losses of our own troops as well as of our foes was contained in the telegram which we took care to have published yesterday.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT NEXT SESSION.

MR. ILLINGWORTH (Bradford, W.) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether he could indicate the probable time of the meeting of Parliament next Session?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): I am afraid it would be contrary to precedent to do so, and, of course, it is impossible to foresee what contingencies may arise. As regards the re-assembling of Parliament, I am sure the great majority of Members on both sides will desire that we should have a good holiday.

DR. TANNER: No.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(Mr. Courtney, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Jackson.)

COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN GORST in the Chair.

Clause 1 (Issue of £20,984,191 out of the Consolidated Fund).

MR. CONYBEARE (Cornwall, Camborne) rose to address the Committee—

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! Has the hon. Member an Amendment to propose?

MR. CONYBEARE: No, Sir.

THE CHAIRMAN: Then the hon. Member will not be in Order in addressing the Committee. The Question is "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

DR. TANNER (Cork Co., Mid): I rise for the specific purpose of getting an answer about a Question which I addressed to Her Majesty's Government the day before yesterday, as to whether it is advisable to retain the services of a man against whom charges have been made——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member is not in Order. This clause is a clause directing the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to issue the sum of £20,000,000 out of the Consolidated Fund. The question the hon. Gentleman is raising is not relevant to this clause.

DR. TANNER: A considerable portion of the salaries are paid to public servants in Ireland—I presume some of this £20,000,000 will be paid to public servants in Ireland. I understand it will cover the salaries paid to Resident Magistrates, and what is more, the salary paid to the right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman is not in Order. This is a clause directing the method by which the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury shall issue a certain sum of money out of the Consolidated Fund for the purposes of the Services of the year, and the question the hon. Member is raising is not in Order.

DR. TANNER: I beg to move the reduction of the sum of money by the amount of £300.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! That would not be in Order. The hon. Gentleman's opportunity for moving an Amendment has gone by. The Question is "That this Clause stand part of the Bill." That is a Question which the Committee may either affirm or reject, but it can do nothing else. No speeches will be in Order that are not addressed to that Question.

DR. TANNER: Am I to understand that no question can be raised which will, in the main, point out that there are serious objections why this sum of public money should be granted? Am I to understand that on a question of the employment of a man who has been charged as a swindler and a thief——

THE CHAIRMAN: I cannot argue with the hon. Member. I have decided that the point he has raised is not in Order on this Clause. The Question is, "That this Clause stand part of the Bill." As many as are of that opinion say "Aye"—[Loud Cries of "Aye!"]—contrary, "No."

DR. TANNER: No.

THE CHAIRMAN: The "Ayes" have it.

DR. TANNER: The "Noes" have it.

While the House was being cleared for the Division,

DR. TANNER (sitting in his place with his hat on) said: I beg to say I will not take any Division. I have made my protest.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 (Appropriation of sums voted for supply purposes).

DR. CLARK (Caithness) rose to address the Committee.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. Gentleman rise for the purpose of moving an Amendment on Clause 3?

DR. CLARK: Yes.

THE CHAIRMAN: Will the hon. Gentleman bring up the Amendment?

DR. CLARK: When I move it I will bring it up, Sir. I desire to ask the hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies (Baron Henry de Worms) a very important question——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! I cannot allow a Question to be asked unless an Amendment is moved. The hon. Gentleman will bring up his Amendment or indicate the Amendment he is going to move to this clause. I shall then be able to determine whether it is relevant to the clause or not.

DR. CLARK: Suppose I oppose the clause generally. There are several things to which I object.

THE CHAIRMAN: If the hon. Gentleman objects to the clause generally, he must wait until the Question is put, "That this Clause stand part of the Bill."

DR. CLARK: I want an answer from the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies as to whether the statement which has been wired to-day from the Cape, that it is the intention of the Government to increase the armed force, is true?

THE CHAIRMAN: The Question the hon. Gentleman is asking does not arise on Clause 3.

DR. CLARK: Sir John Gorst—

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! I cannot argue with the hon. Gentleman. If he desires to raise a point of Order I will hear him.

DR. CLARK: It is a point of Order. I want to know whether Schedule B does not include the Vote for Bechuanaland, and the Vote also for the salary of Secretary of State for the Colonies.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Gentleman might put his question in the House. Clause 3 is a clause which directs the appropriation of certain sums of money which have been voted by the House itself to purposes for which the House has voted them. This is a Committee of the Whole House, and it is not open to a Committee of the Whole House to vary or negative any Resolution which is a Resolution of the House itself. I understand the hon. Gentleman wishes to vary or alter a Resolution of the House itself. That cannot be done.

DR. CLARK: I want to get some information in the usual way from the Government.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Gentleman can discuss whether it is expedient that the Supply which has been already granted by the House should or should not be appropriated, and the mode of appropriation; but those are the only questions he can raise. Supply has been already voted. The amount has been already determined. The only question for this Committee is, whether the Treasury shall be compelled by law to appropriate the money which comes into their hands in a certain way.

DR. CLARK: I will raise the question on a different stage of the Bill.

DR. TANNER: I deprecate as much as any Member of the Committee having any altercation with the hon. Gentleman who, happening to be a Member of the Government, may for the time occupy the position of Chairman. I felt extremely put out just now in having to challenge the decision arrived at by the hon. Gentleman, whom I believe this Committee is always pleased to see in the position which he at present occupies pro tem. But I do not think it is expedient that very large sums of money should be passed by this House without the House having a sufficient answer from the responsible Ministers of the Crown, who come to this House and ask for the sums with which to pay the salaried officers of the Crown——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman is now addressing the Committee in opposition to the decision which has been given by the Chair. The question the hon. Gentleman wishes to raise is not relevant to the clause before the Committee. The question before the Committee is whether certain sums of money shall or shall not be appropriated by law to certain purposes. That is the only point, and to that point any observations of the hon. Member must be addressed.

DR. TANNER: That being the case of course I shall—because, as I have already shown, I do not like to enter into any controversy with a salaried officer of Her Majesty's Government ——[Cries of "Order!"] I believe I am perfectly in Order in saying that. If I am wrong the Chairman can call me to Order, and not the salaried officers of the Crown who sit below the Gangway, and who ought to know better than to interrupt me. [THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order!] As I understand you have ruled it out of Order, I think I had better reserve myself for an attack on the third reading of the Bill. At the same time if this sum is to be taken——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! I am very reluctant to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but this is not the occasion to give notice of opposition to the third reading of the Bill. The question I have put to the Committee is "That Clause 3 stand part of the Bill."

MR. CALDWELL (Glasgow, St. Rollox): I shall endeavour to keep in Order. I object to the principle of the application of the grants in the Schedule relating to this clause. I object——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! We are not now discussing the Schedule, but we are discussing whether the sums voted by the House and specified in the Schdules shall or shall not be appropriated by law to the different Services. That is the only question now before the Committee.

MR. CALDWELL: Then I am quite prepared to wait until the Schedules come on. This clause states that the money shall be appropriated according to Schedule B annexed. I shall, of course, as I am bound to do, bow to your decision, Sir; but it seems to me that if it be your ruling that upon this clause, which expressly states that the sums mentioned shall be appropriated according to Schedule B, and that it is not in Order to discuss the Appropriation in the Schedule upon this clause, we shall have no opportunity of re-raising the question on the appropriation of the money.

THE CHAIRMAN: I wish to be throroughly understood by the hon.

Member and the Committee. I cannot say now whether the hon. Member will or will not be in Order in any Motion he may make hereafter. But I think I ought to remind the hon. Member and the Committee that the different items in Schedule B consist of sums of money granted, by Resolutions of Committee of Supply, to Her Majesty for the Services of the year. Those Resolutions of Committee of Supply have been reported to the House, and the House has been pleased, by Resolution, to agree to those Resolutions, and it is not competent for this Committee to either review or alter the decisions which have been come to by the House itself.

DR. TANNER: Am I to understand, Sir John Gorst, that this Committee of the Whole House is called together and sits merely for the purpose of passing the sums which have already come under the consideration of the House and the Committee of the House, without any discussion of material points—notably, the point I was endeavouring to raise—which is the continuance of the services of a gentleman who has been accused of being a thief and a swindler?

THE CHAIRMAN: I cannot undertake to lay down any general or universal rule to the Committee. All I am called upon to do is to decide the points brought before the Committee as they arise. But I should not think it fair to decide the point now brought before the Committee without warning the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Caldwell) what it was possible my decision might be, if any attempt were made to raise the discussion he wished on Schedule B. My decision is that the criticisms which the hon. Member now desires to make are not germane to the Question, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

MR. CALDWELL: Am I in Order in objecting to the appropriation of this money?

THE CHAIRMAN: If the hon. Gentleman will adduce to the Committee any reasons for not appropriating Supply in this way, and for not binding the Treasury by law to spend the money in the way provided by the Bill, he will, of course, be in Order.

MR. CALDWELL: I apprehend I shall be perfectly in Order in speaking on the general question why the money should not be given at all. It is often usual to object to a whole grant because one objects to some particular part of the grant. I presume I am entitled to speak in regard to a portion of the grant whether my reasons are sufficient or not for the refusal of the whole grant. I object to the appropriation of this money, because of the unfair manner in which these grants have been allocated. These grants have been allocated in a higher measure to England than they have been to Scotland. I may mention that according to the Probate Duty Bill——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member is now travelling into the details of Schedule B, which I have already ruled is not in Order on the Question, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

MR. CALDWELL: Then am I to understand I am not entitled to show why this clause should be rejected?

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Gentleman is perfectly at liberty to show cause why this clause should be rejected; but the question in this case is whether, by law, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury are or are not to be bound to apply money already voted by Parliament in the way in which Parliament orders. If the hon. Member has any reasons to urge why the Treasury should not be bound by law this year to appropriate the money in this particular way, he will be in Order in urging it.

MR. CALDWELL: As to your ruling, may I put this question to you, Sir—Suppose that after these sums were voted by the House new circumstances arose whereby the House thought it necessary to intervene and stop the supplies?

THE CHAIRMAN: If the hon. Member has any reasons to urge why the Committee should stop the Supplies—if there are any new circumstances which would induce the Committee to reject this clause altogether, and not to allow the Government to spend the money at all, I think he would be in Order in stating them.

MR. CALDWELL: Am I not right in this—that there is a distinction between the question of Order and the merits of my argument? Would it not be in Order for me to state my argument, and would it not be for the Committee to decide as to the validity of my argument?

THE CHAIRMAN: I am of opinion that if, under cover of argument on the Question, "That Clause 3 shall stand part of the Bill," the hon. Member were really to address himself to questions detailed in Schedule B, that would be trifling with the Committee, and I should have to ask the hon. Member to resume his seat.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.): On a point of Order, Sir—may I ask you whether you, as a casual Chairman, have the power to order a Member to discontinue his speech?

THE CHAIRMAN: That is a question I shall decide when the time comes.

MR. CALDWELL: Sir John Gorst, I must take that as a distinct refusal to allow me to discuss this clause, and as raising a very serious Constitutional question. It would not be right to allow this refusal to have a discussion on Clause 3 without a distinct ruling. I understand your ruling to be that unless I have something to show against——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order!

MR. CALDWELL: Well, I will allow you, Sir, to give your ruling yourself, but, in the mean time, I simply seek to show cause why this grant should not be allocated in the way pointed out in Clause 3, and I will wait until I am interrupted. I maintain that we should not grant this Appropriation in Aid in the terms of this Bill until the Committee has had an opportunity of reconsidering the whole question of the division of the grant between England, Scotland, and Ireland.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but I have already three or four times decided that that line of argument is not in Order.

DR. TANNER: I rise to Order, Sir. I was attempting to raise the question of the salary of the Under Secretary of State for India——

MR. ISAACS (Newington, Walworth): I rise to Order——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner) is speaking to a point of Order.

DR. TANNER: I was merely putting this as an example. I think I should have been in Order in moving a reduction upon Clause 2. I find I am out of Order on Clause 3. Shall I be in Order in moving the reduction on the Schedule?

THE CHAIRMAN: We must wait until we come to the Schedule. I intimated what probably my decision would be on the point, because I did not wish to take the Committee by surprise.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clause 5 (Sanction for Navy and Army expenditure for 1886-87 unprovided for).

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Clause stand part of the Bill."

DR. TANNER: This clause sanctions the Army and Navy expenditure for the year. Am I to understand that this is intended to be anything in the nature of a Supplementary Grant or not?

THE CHAIRMAN: It is not part of my business to enter into such explanations. Clause 5 is one which has appeared in every Appropriation Bill for years past. It is a usual clause, and it is to provide for the expenditure in a particular way of the money voted for the Army and Navy. If the hon. Gentleman objects to the way in which the money is to be appropriated he will be in Order in stating his objection.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Schedule A (Grants out of the Consolidated Fund).

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Schedule A stand part of the Bill."

DR. TANNER: On this Schedule I wish to call attention to a certain sum which is appropriated out of the sum voted by the House.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member is in error about Schedule A. It is a Schedule of Acts under which, during the present Session, sums of money have already been granted for the Services of the year.

Schedule agreed to.

Schedule B (Appropriation of grants).

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill."

DR. TANNER rose to address the Committee.

THE CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. Gentleman rise to propose an Amendment to Schedule B?

DR. TANNER: Yes.

THE CHAIRMAN: Then the hon. Gentleman will bring it up.

DR. TANNER: I beg to move that a sum of money, which is to be appropriated out of this Schedule, be reduced by the sum of £300.

THE CHAIRMAN: Which item?

DR. TANNER: Civil Service, Class III. I do so——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! If the hon. Gentleman will bring up his Amendment I shall see exactly what it is.

DR. TANNER walked to the Table and proceeded to put his Amendment in writing.

MR. CONYBEARE: While the hon. Gentleman is writing out his Amendment may I——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order!

MR. CONYBEARE: I thought it would save time.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order!

DR. TANNER having handed in his Amendment,

THE CHAIRMAN said: The hon. Member proposes to move that the Civil Service Estimates, Class III., Schedule B, Part VII., the sum total of which is £6,398,872, be reduced by the sum of £300. I am of opinion that such an Amendment cannot be put, and for the following reasons:—The sums which are specified in Class III., Schedule B, Part VII. are various sums which have been appropriated by Resolution of the Committee of Supply for the Services of the year. Those Resolutions of the Committee of Supply have been duly reported to the House itself, and the House itself has on each occasion passed Resolutions expressing its agreement with the Committee of Supply in the said Resolutions. The various sums so appropriated are, therefore, appropriated by the Resolution of the House itself, and I am of opinion that this Committee of the House now sitting is not competent to entertain any Amendment which would be inconsistent with the Resolutions which have been arrived at by the House itself. This Amendment, therefore, cannot be put.

MR. SEXTON: I wish to ask you, Sir, whether in your opinion it would be open to raise this question for determination on the Report of these proceedings to the House itself.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member will see that the Report stage will be taken with the Speaker in the Chair. It would be most improper for me to express an opinion as to what would be in Order under such circumstances.

MR. CALDWELL: What is the object of Schedule B being put, when there is no power to move Amendments?

THE CHAIRMAN: That is not a question which I think I ought to be asked. It is not part of my business to explain the reasons for the various forms of the House.

DR. CLARK: Is it possible to leave out any portion of this Schedule?

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member asks me a general question. I must decline to answer a general question. If the hon. Member will show me what part he proposes to omit I will consider the Amendment.

DR. CLARK, having handed up his Amendment,

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member proposes to leave out No. 15 of Part 6. No. 15 of Part 6 appears to be for Salaries and Expenses of the Local Government Board, including various Grants in Aid of local taxation. The total is £4,448,968, and that is the sum resolved upon by the House itself, and, according to the principle which I endeavoured to explain to the Committee just now, it is incompetent for this Committee of the Whole House to alter the decision of the House itself.

MR. WADDY (Lincolnshire, Brigg): May I suggest, Sir, upon the point of Order, that this very narrow limitation of the subjects we are entitled to discuss is, perhaps, not quite in accordance with the principle laid down when this very matter was discussed in the House under the Speakership of Mr. Brand, on the 12th of August, 1876. The principle then laid down was, as you, Sir, will, no doubt, remember, that although we are not in a position to deal with the Appropriation Bill in the same way as we deal will Votes in Committee of Supply—there must be some relevancy, of course—yet matters may be introduced touching the principles upon which the sums have been granted, and even the length of time for which the sums may be granted. The question then suggested to the Speaker was, whether we were not at liberty to limit Supplies to three months, instead of allowing it to go over the whole year. Mr. Speaker

Brand was not prepared to say that it would be in Order to move an Amendment limiting the Supplies to three months; but he thought the hon. Member for Poole was in Order in asking whether it was proper that the Naval Forces of the country should be sent to Turkish waters in favour of a certain policy, and in calling in question the conduct of the Diplomatic Agents of the Crown for whom Supplies had been appropriated. It appears, therefore, that it is competent for us to discuss the conduct of the servants of the Crown for whom the Supplies have been appropriated, and that we can do so upon the question of appropriating these Supplies. Surely it is competent for us to decline to appropriate a particular sum of money to a particular person on account of the conduct of that person. Perhaps I had better read Mr. Speaker Brand's own words—

"It is not for me to answer any hypothetical questions which may be put; but with reference to what has fallen from the hon. and learned Member for Limerick (Mr. Butt), I am by no means prepared to say that an Amendment on the Appropriation Bill limiting the Supplies to three months would be out of Order. As to the question whether the hon. Member for Poole was in Order, I may say that although he made no Motion, yet he gave Notice of calling attention to certain matters, and it appeared to me that he was in Order, because he raised the question of Supplies in a most direct manner. For instance, he asked whether it was proper that the naval forces of the country should be sent to Turkish waters in favour of a certain policy, and he also called in question the conduct of the Diplomatic Agents of the Crown, for whom Supplies had been appropriated. I think it right to observe that I interrupted the hon. Member for Dundee when he proposed to speak generally of the Constitution of the country, and it certainly appeared to me that such a discussion was scarcely relevant to the Appropriation Bill."—(3 Hansard [231], 1161.)

An hon. MEMBER: What stage was it?

MR. WADDY: The stage we are now upon.

An hon. MEMBER: In Committee?

MR. WADDY: The Speaker was in the Chair, and was laying down what might be discussed upon the Appropriation Bill.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member's observations refer to the different stages of the Appropriation Bill in the House itself. It would be most presumptuous in me to state what is or is not in Order in the House. Perhaps I may be allowed to say that no doubt, on the various stages of the Appropriation Bill in the House, considerable latitude always has been given as to the topics which may be discussed. I may remind the Committee that, up to the present year, there was always a stage at which a Motion was made that Mr. Speaker do leave the Chair, in order that the House might go into Committee. That was a stage of the Bill in the House itself. The function we are engaged in now is of a much more humble character. We are examining the details of this Bill in Committee, and the Question put to me is whether in Committee of the Whole House a Motion to amend Schedule B can be entertained. That is the question which was put to me, and I have given my decision—namely, that in my humble opinion such a Motion is not in Order upon the ground that such a Motion would be inconsistent with the decision which the House itself has arrived at, and to which the Committee of the Whole House is bound to conform.

MR. CALDWELL: If it is held that we cannot now re-open any of the items, because the Votes have already been passed by the Committee of Supply, and been approved by the House—if the decision of the House already arrived at is final and not subject to repeal—upon what principle is it that we can raise these questions in the House itself when the third reading comes on?

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman is asking me conundrums which I have several times stated to the Committee I do not consider myself competent to express an opinion upon. But I may, perhaps, remind the hon. Member that, though the House itself may be entitled to review and re-consider its own decisions, it does not follow that a Committee of the Whole House can undertake that function.

MR. SEXTON: With reference to the declaration of the late Speaker, quoted by the hon. and learned Gentleman the Member for the Brigg Division of Lincolnshire (Mr. Waddy), to the effect that the conduct of the agents of the Crown can be criticized upon the Appropriation Bill, I would ask you whether it is possible, on any other stage of the Bill than that of Committee, to touch the salaries of certain public servants — to move to reduce items?

THE CHAIRMAN: That, again, is a question I cannot answer. I cannot say what will be done in the House itself, and I cannot say what the procedure of the House will be. In my opinion the items in Schedule B cannot be amended in Committee of the Whole House upon the Appropriation Bill.

DR. CLARK: Is it in the province of the Committee to consider the policy embodied in the Votes before passing them?

THE CHAIRMAN: I should say not. The Committee has to consider the details of the Bill—to see that the details of the Bill are satisfactory and correct.

DR. TANNER: I rise for the purpose of suggesting that Schedule B——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member must either move an Amendment to Schedule B or wait until I put the Question, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill."

MR. CALDWELL: I have put down as an Amendment that part ("a") of Schedule B be omitted.

THE CHAIRMAN: I rule, for the same reasons I have already given, that such an Amendment is inadmissible.

Question proposed, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill."

DR. TANNER: Sir, as I disapprove strongly of the policy of murder and assassination, backed up by lying, and as I disapprove of the employment—although such persons may be congenial to certain people—of swindlers and thieves—I wish to put the matter as mildly as I possibly can, in order that the Chief Secretary may understand—I beg to move that Class III. be not appropriated.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! It is too late for the hon. Member to do that. I paused for a long time before I put the question, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill," in order to allow anyone to propose an Amendment. It is now too late to move an Amendment.

DR. TANNER: I move that the money be not allocated.

THE CHAIRMAN: It has already been decided that from the date of the passing of the Act certain money shall be appropriated to certain purposes. The only question now is whether Schedule B shall be a Schedule of the Bill.

MR. CALDWELL: I thought we had precluded ourselves by approving of Clause 3, which provides that Schedule B in its entirety shall be appropriated.

DR. TANNER: I beg to move a reduction of Schedule B. I for one am of opinion that in the state of affairs in which we are at present landed by Her Majesty's Government, through the horrid and iniquitous manner of proceeding which is their leading and chief characteristic in dealing with any unfortunate people with whom they may happen to come in contact, whether, it be Sir John Gorst—[Cries of "Order!"]

THE CHAIRMAN: It is proper to speak of Members by the constituencies they represent, and not by their individual names.

DR. TANNER: I was speaking of the Chair. I am always in the habit when Mr. Courtney is in the Chair of addressing him as Mr. Courtney, and I did not know I was out of Order in addressing the present Chairman by the name which he dignifies. I say that when we in this House are doing what we are supposed by our constituents to do, taking into consideration the action of the Government or Governments, and seeing what we see at a time like the present, with all the populations, whether they be those "black people" of whom we have heard——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Member's observations are not germane to the Question, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill."

DR. TANNER: I was coming to that, if you give me time. If I am not to be permitted to speak, if the Chairman tells me not to speak I will resume my seat.

THE CHAIRMAN: I cannot allow the hon. Member to address the Chair in that way. He is perfectly in Order in addressing to the Committee any remarks relevant to the Question, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill." If the hon. Member makes remarks of another character, it is my duty to call him to Order.

DR. TANNER: We all understand that; but I rose for the purpose of calling attention to a fact. I thought Her Majesty's Government would have given me some facility in this matter, but I regret to say that they have not done so. I made a very specific charge, and I have done my best in every possible way, consulting, in the first place, the Chair—everybody in this House cannot at all times be thought rashly of because they may make a casual mistake. I say when we are here in Committee of Supply to appropriate sums of money for a swindler and a thief, a servant of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, the right hon. Gentleman ought to be in his place, and ought not to be such a coward as he is.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! I direct the hon. Member to resume his seat.

DR. TANNER: I called the Chief Secretary a coward, and he is a coward.

MR. AIRD (Paddington, N.): Mr. Chairman, I beg to move——

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! I must request the hon. Member for Mid Cork to withdraw the word "coward."

DR. TANNER: I call him a coward and a liar, and he is both: I call him a coward and a liar.

THE CHAIRMAN: As the hon. Member refuses to withdraw the language which I characterize as un-Parliamentary—as he has not only refused to withdraw it, but repeated it with aggravation in the hearing of the Committee—I have no course but to name Dr. Tanner—[DR. TANNER: With the greatest possible pleasure]—for disregarding the authority of the Chair.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): Then, Sir, I have to move that Dr. Tanner be suspended from the service of the House.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That Dr. Tanner be suspended from the service of the House."—(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

MR. CONYBEARE: On the question of Order, Sir—

THE CHAIRMAN: As many as are of that opinion say "Aye." [Loud cries of "Aye!"]

MR. CONYBEARE: On the question of Order, Sir—

MR. SEXTON: On the question of Order, Sir, I should like to ask whether the power to name a Member to the House is not confined to Mr. Speaker when in the Chair, and to the Chairman of Ways and Means when presiding over a Committee of the Whole House? I beg to submit that as you are not the Chairman of Ways and Means, you have no power to name anyone.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member is in error. The power is not confined to the Speaker or Chairman of Ways and Means. It is a power which is given to any Member who occupies the Chair; and I may remind the Committee that I am not a mere casual Chairman, but one of those who was designated under the Standing Order by Mr. Speaker.

Question put, and agreed to.

Whereupon the Chairman left the Chair in order to report the said Resolution to the House.

MR. SPEAKER having resumed the Chair—

SIR JOHN GORST reported that Dr. Tanner had been named by him to the Committee as disregarding the authority of the Chair, and that the Committee had resolved that Dr. Tanner be suspended from the service of the House.

Whereupon Mr. Speaker put the Question to the House, "That Dr. Tanner be suspended from the service of the House."—(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

MR. CHAPLIN (Lincolnshire, Sleaford): On a question of Order, Mr. Speaker—

MR. SPEAKER: There can be no debate.

Question put, and agreed to.

MR. SPEAKER then directed Dr. Tanner to withdraw.

MR. SEXTON: He has withdrawn, Sir.

MR. CHAPLIN: On a point of Order, Sir, cannot an Amendment be moved?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order!

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

Bill again considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Question, "That Schedule B stand part of the Bill," put and agreed to.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Chairman do report the Bill without Amendment to the House."

MR. CALDWELL: I object to this Bill being reported to the House in its present state, seeing that we are very anxious to have everything done in order, and that there is a Preamble to this Bill. I submit to you, Sir, that before we report the Bill to the House, and as we are approaching the end of the Session, and as it is inconvenient to prolong the Session, it would be very inconvenient to report the Bill before we get through it. I therefore move that the Preamble to the Bill be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman is in error. There is no Preamble to the Bill.

Question put, and agreed to.

Bill reported, without Amendment; to be read the third time To-morrow, at Twelve of the clock.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES ACT, 1875, AMENDMENT (No. 4) BILL.—[BILL 398.]

Mr. Tomlinson, Sir Joseph Pease, Mr. Burt, Mr. Bradlaugh, Colonel Blundell, Mr. Wood, Mr. Abraham (Rhondda).

COMMITTEE.

Bill considered in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Clause 1 (Exemptions from provisions of Section 30 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, 38 and 39 Vict. c. 60 in certain cases).

Amendment proposed,

In page 1, leave out from beginning of line 5 to "which," in line 6, and insert, "Where any society, by reason of its being constituted so as to receive contributions by means of collectors at a greater distance than ten miles from its registered office."—(Mr. Tomlinson.)

Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Clause."

MR. CONYBEARE (Cornwall, Camborne) said, he understood that this Bill could not be proceeded with in "another place" this Session, and therefore it appeared to him that to proceed with the consideration of the Amendments to the Bill at the present time was simply to waste the time of the Committee. He moved that the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again, and did so in the interests of Members on both sides of the House.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Chairman do report Progress, and ask leave to sit again."—(Mr. Conybeare.)

MR. TOMLINSON (Preston) said, he would not like to absolutely contradict the hon. Member when he said the Bill could not be passed this Session. He could not say whether the Bill could be passed this Session or not, and he certainly had no wish to detain the Committee unnecessarily. If it was the wish of the Committee that the Bill should not proceed further he would not oppose the Motion to report Progress; but he desired to say that it would be a great misfortune to many working men in the country if this Bill were not passed this Session. The Bill was brought in to amend a defect in the Friendly Societies Act, which had excluded large Miners' Associations from the benefits of that Act. No real opposition had been offered to the Bill, and its progress had been stopped hitherto only by hon. Members who probably had never taken the trouble to read the Bill. He desired to leave it to the Committee to say whether the Bill should be proceeded with. If there was any chance of its passing this Session, and it would not occupy more than five minutes, for the Amendments were merely formal, he should personally desire to proceed. With the permission of the Committee he would like to point out that the Members who had backed the Bill were, besides himself, Sir Joseph Pease, Mr. Burt, Mr. Bradlaugh, Colonel Blundell, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Abraham (Rhondda Division of Glamorgan). The hon. Member for the Camborne Division of Cornwall was, with himself (Mr. Tomlinson), a Member of the Committee which reported in favour of establishing a Miners' Association in Cornwall similar to those affected by the Bill, and that Association could not be formed unless the Bill passed.

MR. CONYBEARE said, the hon. Member for Preston had attacked him with considerable vehemence and warmth. It was not for the hon. Member to attack him, for the hon. Member certainly did not assist the miners when he sat on the Committee to which he had referred, but he opposed the miners' interests at every point, and was most obstructive. That, however, was not the point. He (Mr. Conybeare), in the interests of those who had got other matters to look after, and who did not wish to waste their time in the Committee upon the present occasion, simply pointed out what he understood was the fact from a Gentleman sitting upon the Ministerial Benches. He asked any Member of the Government to say whether the Bill could be passed this Session if it were passed through Committee that afternoon? If it could, he was not going to oppose it on a technical point, but if the Bill could not proceed further than this House during this Session, he maintained that it was a waste of time to proceed with the consideration of the Amendments. He wanted information from a Member of the Government. He did not in the least oppose the Bill on any fictitious ground. If the Bill could be passed this Session he would remain here as long as was necessary to consider the Amendments on their merits, but if the Bill could not go through the House of Lords it was a waste of their time to go any further. Surely, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was in a position to say whether there was any likelihood of the Bill being passed through the other House this Session or not.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square) said, the passing of the Bill depended upon whether the Bill reached their Lordships in sufficient time for it to be passed. Unless it was passed that day or to-morrow through all its stages there would be no time to pass it this Session. If hon. Members would allow sufficient time to give the Bill a chance, the Government would offer no opposition whatever. He advised the Committee to pass the Bill through its remaining stages, so that it might be at once sent up to the House of Lords in the hope of it becoming law immediately. If that were not done, the responsibility would rest on those who had blocked it at this period of the Session.

MR. CONYBEARE said, he was quite satisfied with the statement of the right hon. Gentleman. He was given to understand that there was absolutely no chance of the Bill passing this Session. He begged to withdraw his Motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. Conybeare

Original Question again proposed.

Amendment proposed to amend the proposed Amendment by inserting the word "friendly" after the word "any."—(Sir Herbert Maxwell.)

Question proposed, "That the word 'friendly' be there inserted."

DR. CLARK (Caithness) said, he wished to understand the meaning of the Amendment. This Bill was brought in for specific purposes, and since it had been brought in there had been a great many Amendments put down.

THE CHAIRMAN: The hon. Member is not in Order in asking for explanation of other Amendments.

Question put, and agreed to.

Amendment, as amended, agreed to.

On the Motion of Mr. TOMLINSON, the following Amendments were agreed to:—In page 1, line 8, leave out from "on," to "and," in line 10, and insert "the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies;" page 1, line 12, after "members," insert "thereof;" page 1, line 12, after "may," insert "on the application of the society;" page 1, line 13, leave out "provision," and insert "provisions;" page 1, line 13, leave out "section thirty," and insert "the said section;" page 1, line 17, after "society," insert "affected;" page 1, line 21, leave out "and."

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Bill reported; as amended, considered.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

AFRICA (EQUATORIAL)—MR. STANLEY AND EMIN PASHA.

ADJOURNMENT.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): I rise to move the Adjournment of the House, and in doing so wish to read two letters which have come to hand, and which will, I am sure, be satisfactory to the House. There is a Reuter telegram, dated Zanzibar, Dec. 21, to the following effect:—

"Letters dated from Stanley Falls on August 29 last reached here by Tippoo Tib's men to-day, stating that on the preceding day a letter had been received from Mr. Stanley. He was then at Bonalya, on the Aruwhimi. He had left Emin Pasha 82 days previously in perfect health, with plenty of food, and had himself returned for his rearguard and loads. He had arrived at Bonalya on August 17, and intended leaving ten days later, presumably to rejoin Emi n Pasha. All the white men of the expedition were in good health and wanted nothing."

There is a further telegram from the Eastern Telegraph Company, who have had the courtesy to put it into our hands. It is dated "Friday, 2 p.m.," and is from the agent of the Company to Sir James Anderson:—

"I have just received information Stanley has arrived with Emin Pasha on the Aruwhimi; news reliable; further details follow."

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That this House do now adjourn."—(Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

SIR WILFRID LAWSON (Cumberland, Cockermouth) said, there were reports that our troops were to march on Handoub. He did not hesitate to accept in good faith what the Government had said on the subject, but he thought it would be satisfactory to them if the right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer would say that there was no truth in the reports.

MR. GOSCHEN: We have no information whatever to that effect from General Grenfell.

MR. CONYBEARE (Cornwall, Camborne) in reference to an answer by the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary yesterday, as to the handcuffing of a boy while being removed from prison to the reformatory, read a letter from an ex-warder of Strangeways Gaol, Manchester, stating, in contradiction of the answer, that it was not only customary but compulsory to handcuff boys in such circumstances, and asked the right hon. Gentleman whether he would be kind enough to inquire further into the matter?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (MR. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.) said, the information he read to the House, of the accuracy of which he had no doubt, was derived from the prison officials, and it was to the effect that it was not usual to handcuff a boy unless there was apprehended danger either of an attempted escape or rescue. He would be glad, however, to see the letter sent to the hon. Member by an ex-warder.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL (Kirkcaldy, &c.) said he must press for a more distinct answer to the question addressed earlier in the evening to the Secretary of State for War (Mr. E. Stanhope) as to whether the British troops at Suakin, having done their duty, would now return, or whether discretionary power had been given to the commanding officer to carry on further operations in the Soudan. He gave as a reason for pressing the question that the answer of the Secretary of State was an evasive one.

MR. GOSCHEN: Really the hon. Gentleman is so suspicious that it is useless giving him any declaration whatever. We have nothing whatever to take away from any declaration we have made. There is no change whatever in the situation; and I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman, who has himself governed a Province, and who must be acquainted with the ways of the Press, should consider that everything stated as regards the intentions of the Government must immediately be contradicted or otherwise be accepted as correct. I have really nothing to add. We shall not depart one inch from the declaration I have made.

MR. H. T. DAVENPORT (Staffordshire, Leek) asked if the telegram read a few minutes before to the House stated the date of the reported arrival of Emin Pasha and Stanley at the Aruwhimi?

MR. GOSCHEN: We have not got the date.

MR. H. T. DAVENPORT said, that would make it about August.

MR. GOSCHEN: Further details are to follow. I suppose they will be here in a few hours.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION.

SPECIAL COMMISSION ACT, 1888—PRODUCTION OF THE TEST ROLL.

MR. KIMBER (Wandsworth) presented a Petition from Messrs. Soames, Edwards, and Jones, 158, Lincoln's Inn Fields, the solicitors to The Times, praying that leave be given to the proper officer of the House to attend the Special Commission now sitting in the High Court of Justice for the purpose of producing the Test Rolls of the House of Commons from the year 1875 to 1888 inclusive, and having read the Petition, moved that leave be given in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That leave be given to the proper Officer of the House to attend accordingly."—(Mr. Kimber.)

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.): This, Sir, is a surprising and unprecedented proceeding; and I wish to know, in the first place, whether notice has been given to my hon. Friend the Member for the City of Cork (Mr. Parnell) that this Petition would be brought forward today. We all understood that this Sitting was simply for formal Business, in order that the Session might be brought to a close; but this is a proceeding which has reference to an Act passed in August last, nearly five months ago. My hon. Friend the Member for the City of Cork was in attendance yesterday; he has been in constant attendance this week, but he happens to be absent now; and I appeal to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and to the other Ministers now present whether a Petition of this kind, affecting, as it does, mainly and directly, an hon. Member of this House, should be made without notice in the absence of that hon. Member, although I have no doubt he would cheerfully accept it if he were present. I would beg to move, as an Amendment, that due notice be given to the hon. Member for the City of Cork, and that the prayer of the Petition be taken into consideration when my hon. Friend can be in attendance.

MR. SPEAKER: I think, perhaps, I ought to explain my action in this matter. During the Adjournment a Petition was presented to me asking that the Test Roll might be produced before the Court then sitting. I considered it very carefully, and I agreed to allow it to be produced, but only on condition that both parties should have access to it, and that no action should be taken on it unless under the direction of the Commission Court. No action was taken until the House met on November 6; and I then informed the parties that I should not consider it my province to allow the Test Roll to be supplied to the Commission Court, inasmuch as the House was sitting, and the ordinary course must be taken to petition the House that it might be granted.

MR. SEXTON: In the absence of my hon. Friend the Member for the City of Cork, I am unable to say what action he would desire to take in the matter; but it certainly seems to me that in so vital a principle no action affecting a Member of this House should be taken in his absence and without notice, and I think it right to divide the House on the Question.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.): The general principle laid down by the hon.

Gentleman is, of course, true—namely, that action should not be taken against an hon. Member of this House unless he is in his place and has received notice. But I do not gather that this Motion involves any action affecting an hon. Member. A duly constituted Court is sitting, and it is desired, in the interests of the Court itself and of the parties, that the Test Roll of this House should be produced. The House of Commons has sole control over its own documents. That is a matter which is notorious, and which cannot be affected by the present application in the least degree. Then I would ask, is the House prepared to withhold a document which is in its custody and which is required for the purposes of justice? I apprehend that it is clearly not. I cannot conceive that the absence of the hon. Member for the City of Cork can, in the least degree, affect the question. What ulterior consequences may result is a matter with which we have nothing to do.

MR. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM (Lanark, N.W.): May I ask if it is not the more usual course for the Court itself to make an application of this kind, rather than a firm of solicitors? I understand that the production of the Test Roll is required in order to test the signature of the hon. Member for the City of Cork. I would put it to the right hon. Gentleman the Home Secretary whether, as a lawyer, this is a regular course to take?

MR. MATTHEWS: I understood the Speaker to say that an application had been made to him; but that he refused to accede to it until a Petition was presented in regular form to the House.

MR. SPEAKER: An application was made to me, and I said the Test Roll should be produced; but I guarded my consent, so that no unfair advantage should be taken, by saying that it should only be produced on condition that both parties had access to it, and that no action should be taken on it except under the direction of the Court. Of course, the Test Roll would have been produced if the House of Commons had not met again; but as the House had met again, and as I thought I had discharged my functions, I thought it best for the House to decide for itself when the Test Roll should be produced.

MR. SEXTON: I beg to thank you, Sir, for your statement; but having regard to the principle that no hon. Member should have action taken against him in his absence, I shall certainly divide against the Motion. I do not understand why the Motion cannot be postponed until Monday.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): The House will only meet formally on Monday, and not for Business.

MR. SEXTON: Why not?

Question put.

The House divided:—Ayes 54; Noes 13: Majority 41.—(Div. List. No. 357.)

Ordered, That leave be given to the proper Officer of the House to attend the Sittings of the Special Commission and to produce the Test Roll.

QUESTIONS.

SCOTLAND—THE AIRDRIE AND COATBRIDGE WATER COMPANY,

MR. M'EWAN (Edinburgh, Central) (for Mr. D. CRAWFORD) (Lanark, N.E.) asked the Lord Advocate, Whether his attention had been called to a Report by Mr. James Muir, C.A., on the accounts of the Airdrie and Coatbridge Water Company, in which it is stated that the Directors have levied rates exceeding those authorized by Parliament, and adopted a method of accounting which deprived the ratepayers of a reduction of rates amounting to upwards of £5,000; whether any contradiction or explanation of the above statement has been given since the Report was published on November 17; and whether he will inquire into the matter, and consider what remedy can be afforded to the ratepayers, the majority of whom are working men?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND (Mr. M. T. STORMONTH DARLING) (Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities) (who replied) said: The matter referred to in the Question appears to be one rather for the Civil Courts than for the Lord Advocate. I am not aware whether any contradiction or explanation of the statement has been given, but the Lord Advocate will cause inquiry to be made, and will communicate the result to the hon. Member.

LAW AND JUSTICE—ASSAULTS IN RAILWAY CARRIAGES.

MR. ROWNTREE (Scarborough) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If his attention has been called to a case of aggravated insult recently offered by a man to two young women on the premises of the London and Brighton Railway Company, when Mr. Partridge, in sentencing the Defendant, is reported to have said—

"This man's conduct has been disgraceful in the extreme, and if I had the power I would send him to prison without the option of a fine;"

whether the inability of the magistrate to imprison was due to the fact that the charge was made under the by-laws of the Railway Company, or to any defect in the law apart from this; and, if the latter, whether he will consider the practicability of making the law more equal in its application to men and women?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.), in reply, said, that a careful inquiry was being made into the facts of the case; but he had not yet received a Report from the magistrate. As soon as he did receive it he would make it public.

THE MAGISTRACY—THE IPSWICH MAGISTRATES.

MR. F. S. STEVENSON (Suffolk, Eye) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether his attention has been called to the circumstances under which Joseph Farrington was committed to Ipswich Gaol, on Thursday, December 13, at the Halesworth Petty Sessions, in default of paying a fine of £1 and 11*s.* costs; whether there was any evidence against Farrington beyond the fact that he was accidentally in company with the co-defendant Calver, whose dog had killed a rabbit; whether it is true that Farrington, although he had the money in his pocket to pay the fine, elected to go to prison as a protest; and, whether, considering the circumstances of the case, he will take such steps as will secure the immediate and complete remission of the penalty?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.), in reply, said, in this case, also, an inquiry was being made; but he had not yet received a Report from the magistrates.

RIOTS, &c. (IRELAND)—THE DISTURBANCES AT NAAS.

MR. CAREW (Kildare, N.) asked the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Whether his attention has been called to the Resolution which was passed at a meeting of the inhabitants of Naas on the 12th instant, demanding a sworn inquiry into the conduct of the officers responsible for the attack by the police on the people on the evening of the 3rd instant; and, if so, what steps he intends to take in the matter?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) (who replied) said: The Government saw no reason for holding a sworn inquiry such as was suggested in the Question. It was not intended to take any steps in the matter, as the facts showed that no unnecessary violence was used on the occasion.

ARMY PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS—ERRORS IN EXAMINATION PAPERS.

MR. KELLY (Camberwell, N.) (for Mr. HUBBARD) (Bucks, N.) asked the Secretary to the Treasury, Whether he will take steps to ensure, in future, the accuracy and suitability of Army Examination Papers, beyond the possibility of doubt?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. JACKSON) (Leeds, N.), in reply, said: The Question of the hon. Member contained a rather strong order, which he was not quite sure it would be possible to carry out. He might say that the question had been brought before the Civil Service Commissioners, and he believed they had taken steps, as far as possible, to ensure the result asked for. They said they found that hitherto no steps had been taken to secure that the papers in the form in which they were distributed to the candidates had been looked through and tested by some competent authority before the examination began. They consider it necessary that this should be done, and it was intended to take steps to secure this result. Probably a better system would, in consequence, be devised. This answer would apply not to Army Examination Papers only, but to all Examination Papers.

In reply to a further Question,

Mr. JACKSON said, the Committee had had no Report before them in regard to any question except the one which had arisen in the House of Commons; and after inquiry it became apparent that a mistake had been committed in regard to the Examination Papers. The object of the inquiry had been to ensure that there should be no further mistake in regard to the Examination Papers.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE—LATE SITTINGS.

SIR TINDAL ROBERTSON (Brighton) asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether, referring to a statement of the First Lord of the Treasury at the end of the Session of 1887—

> "That it would be the duty of the Government to propose to the House of Commons, early in the next Session, to adopt Rules for the regulation of its proceedings, so as to put an end to the excessively late Sittings which have exhausted the Members and officials during the Session now brought to a close," and considering that during the past weeks of the present Session the late hours, which have been described as having exhausted the Members and officials of the House, having again become so frequent as to endanger the health both of Members and officials, the Government will take steps to prevent, if possible, it being necessary, in future, that the House should sit later than 1 o'clock?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square), in reply, said, he thought it very desirable to avoid late Sittings; but he was afraid it would be impossible to give any kind of undertaking or pledge that late Sittings would be entirely done away with at the end of a Session. There was no doubt they tried the patience and physical powers of the House very much, and the Government, on their part, were extremely grateful to hon. Members for the large attendances, notwithstanding the lateness of the hours; but it would really be premature to make any declaration on the subject at present, and he feared that a certain elasticity must always be preserved towards the end of an Autumn Session.

SOUTH AFRICA—THE BECHUANALAND POLICE.

DR. CLARK (Caithness) asked the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Whether it is the case that Colonel Carrington is to return to take charge of the Bechuanaland Police; and, whether it is the intention to increase that force by 200 men?

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE (Baron HENRY DE WORMS) (Liverpool, East Toxteth): Yes, Sir; such is the intention of Her Majesty's Government.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT, 1888—REGISTER OF COUNTY ELECTORS.

MR. LAWSON (St. Pancras, W.) asked the President of the Local Government Board, Whether he is aware that the Register of County Electors has been published separately from the Parliamentary Electors by the Returning Officer for St. Pancras; and if the double expense thus imposed on all persons wishing to obtain copies of those entitled to vote in either one of the two elections is not contrary to the arrangement proposed in this House?

THE PRESIDENT (Mr. RITCHIE) (Tower Hamlets, St. George's): I have no knowledge of the particular case cited. There is nothing in the Statute to prevent separate Registers being issued; but certainly, where the Parliamentary and County Divisions are the same, as is the case in the Metropolis, I see not the smallest necessity for it.

METROPOLIS—POPLAR PLACE, ST. PANCRAS.

MR. LAWSON (St. Pancras, W.) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Whether it is true that the Governors of the Foundling Hospital have leased to a builder, as a site for artizans' dwellings, a plot of land of about 550 square yards, upon which is the court known as Poplar Place, St. Pancras; and, whether, if so, considering the excessive crowding of the adjoining alleys, and the fact that in this group of houses the death rate is abnormally high, it would be possible to prevent the erection of buildings upon this land, and to cause it to be preserved as a public playground or yard?

THE SECRETATY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.), in reply, said, he had received no official information upon the matter; but he intended to cause an inquiry to be made.

PRINTING AND PUBLICATION OF REPORTS AND PROCEEDINGS OF PARLIAMENT.

MR. P. O'BRIEN (Monaghan, N.) asked the Secretary to the Treasury, Whether he would have any objection to state generally the terms of the contract for the official Reports of Parliament entered into with the Messrs. Macrae and Company, Limited; and, if it is true that this firm have undertaken to recoup themselves for expense of reporting by the sale of the volumes of the official Reports?

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. JACKSON) (Leeds, N.): I am about to lay on the Table of the House a copy of the contract, so that it may be in the hands of hon. Members in the course of the day. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to know generally what the nature of the contract is, I think I may say that the firm to whom the contract has been given have undertaken to do the work without a subsidy.

MR. P. O'BRIEN, arising out of the answer, asked the Secretary to the Treasury whether he had satisfied himself that the contract could be fulfilled on the terms agreed upon without having recourse to what was known as the "sweating system" in the Reporters' Gallery?

MR. JACKSON said, he had nothing whatever to do with the "sweating system." What he had done was to carry out the request of the Joint Committee—namely, to invite tenders for the performance of the work. He had satisfied himself that sufficient security had been provided that the work should be carried out in a satisfactory manner. In accordance with the usual course, all things being equal, he had accepted the lowest tender.

MR. P. O'BRIEN asked, if the Government had any knowledge that the hon. Member for North Kensington (Sir Roper Lethbridge) was a member of the Company who had entered into the contract; and whether the ratification of the contract would not, under such circumstances, vacate the seat of the hon. Member.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): No, Sir; I have no such knowledge. I believe it is a Limited Liability Company, and not a firm.

AFRICA (EQUATORIAL)—MR. STANLEY AND EMIN BEY.

MR. LAWSON (St. Pancras, W.): I wish to know if Her Majesty's Government have any news to communicate to the House respecting Mr. Stanley and Emin Bey further than that which has been communicated to the public journals?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): No, Sir; we have nothing further to communicate.

EGYPT—THE BATTLE AT SUAKIN.

MR. CREMER (Shoreditch, Haggerston): I beg to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether the Government has any confirmatory intelligence to impart to the House in reference to the numbers of killed and wounded on both sides in the battle before Suakin the day before yesterday; and, if the information already imparted to the country by the Government is accurate, whether they will take any steps to prevent a further battue of the Arabs on the system of scientific slaughter which had been adopted?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): No; I am not aware that any further intelligence has been received. I am not aware whether the Secretary of State for War is present or not; but if there had been any further telegram I think I should have seen it.

MR. CREMER: The right hon. Gentleman has omitted to answer the last part of the Question—namely, whether they will ascertain that the number of killed and wounded on each side was in the proportions stated in the newspapers—namely, 12 on the side of the British and Egyptians, and 1,000 on the side of the Arabs; and, if so, whether Her Majesty's Government propose to take any further steps to prevent a future battue of the same character?

MR. GOSCHEN: I think the House must feel that the language which the hon. Member has used is not such as really deserves reply, so far as the Government is concerned. Such insults upon the troops of Her Majesty, I think, should not be uttered. With regard to the special question which the hon. Member puts—and is perfectly entitled to put—I may say that I have no doubt whatever that the Reports which were sent to us, and which have been communicated to the House, told the full truth. There is no more to be told, either upon the one side or on the other. The first estimates which may have been made by some of the correspondents for the newspapers were arrived at within an hour or two hours after the battle, but, since, the dead have been buried, and there would have been every opportunity of correcting the number of the casualties on either side had there been any great error in them. I have no doubt that the Reports which we have received are correct.

ARMY — THE BATTLE AT SUAKIN — THE BROKEN SWORDS OF THE 20TH HUSSARS.

MR. KELLY (Camberwell, N.): I wish to ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Whether any inquiry will be held as to the circumstances under which the swords of the 20.h Hussars were broken; whether information will be given as to the date at which, and where, the swords were tested; and, whether inquiry will be made as to whether the deaths of any of the men were in consequence of the breaking of the swords?

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): The Question was practically answered yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for War. He stated that a full inquiry would take place.

MR. STAVELEY HILL (Staffordshire, Kingswinford): Will the right hon. Gentleman say whether the Government will be good enough to add to the Report of the result of that inquiry a Paper which has reached us this morning as to the present condition of the bayonets in the British Army?

MR. GOSCHEN: I will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for War that the Question has been put. In his absence I do not pledge the Government.

PRISONS—NEWGATE GAOL.

MR. PICKERSGILL (Bethnal Green, S.W.) asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, If it was true that the demolition of Newgate had been decided upon?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Mr. MATTHEWS) (Birmingham, E.), in reply, said, that under the Prisons Act of 1877 the City authorities were entitled to remove Newgate Gaol. They had undertaken to reconstruct on the site a Court which would be more convenient for the public than the present Old Bailey, and to provide accommodation for prisoners which would satisfy sanitary requirements.

PRISONS (IRELAND)—TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.) asked Mr. Solicitor General for Ireland, Whether the Government would prepare, during the Recess, and lay on the Table of the House, a Return containing the recommendations of the Royal Commission with regard to the treatment of prisoners in Irish prisons in Ireland?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University), in reply, said, the hon. Member was entitled to the Return for which he asked; but, in the absence of his right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary for Ireland, he could not at present say what precise form the Return should take.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

CONSOLIDATED FUND (APPROPRIATION) BILL.

(Mr. Courtney, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Jackson.)

THIRD READING.

Order for Third Reading read.

Motion made, and Question proposed, "That the Bill be now read the third time."

MR. CALDWELL (Glasgow, St. Rollox) said, he wished to ask the Speaker, on a point of Order, whether it would be competent for the House to review the ruling of the Chairman when the House was in Committee yesterday, in consequence of which an essential part of the Bill had not passed through the Committee stage?

MR. SPEAKER: Perhaps the hon. Member will state what portion.

MR. CALDWELL said, the essential part of the Bill that did not pass through the Committee stage was that portion immediately preceding Clause 1. The Chairman began the proceedings in Committee by putting Clause 1 and the succeeding clauses and Schedules; but he did not put that portion of the Bill immediately preceding the clauses, although requested to do so. What he (Mr. Caldwell) submitted to the House was that this preceding portion contained a reason for the Bill, which it would be perfectly in Order for the House to amend if it thought fit. For instance, it said—

"Towards making good the Supply which we have cheerfully granted to Your Majesty in this Session of Parliament have resolved to grant unto Your Majesty the sums hereinafter mentioned."

He submitted that it would have been perfectly competent on his part to move to leave out the word "cheerfully." He desired to know whether it was not competent in Committee to make such a Motion?

MR. SPEAKER: I may as well answer this question at once, although I might properly refuse to answer it, as it is in the nature of an appeal from the Chairman of Committee to the Speaker, which is quite unusual. There is no such thing as an appeal from the Chairman of Committee to the Speaker; but, as a matter of courtesy to the hon. Member, I may say that the proper course was followed. These words are not a Preamble in the strict or even ordinary sense of the term, and the practice is that in money Bills and Bills of this nature the Preamble is never put.

MR. HOWELL (Bethnal Green, N.E.) said, he desired to draw the attention of the House to a very important question. It would be recollected that a few days before the Adjournment for the Autumn Recess he called attention to the fact that the general rules and regulations relating to the Post Office Savings Bank had been laid on the Table, and that during the Recess those rules and regulations would become law. Since then it had been discovered that some very serious inconveniences were likely to arise in regard to the alterations which were made in the rules and regulations in respect to the withdrawal of deposits of friendly societies. Formerly the money could be withdrawn on the signature of two of the trustees, but now all the trustees must sign. This would cause great inconvenience to Trades Unions and friendly societies. He might instance the case of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers. They had five trustees, and three signatures were necessary for withdrawals. But it might frequently happen that one or two of the five would be abroad, and so no money could be obtained for sick pay, &c., when it was required. He thought the whole question should have been submitted to the Registrar of Friendly Societies, whose duty it was to look after the interests of all friendly societies. If this official was not consulted the Secretary to the Treasury had scarcely done his duty; and if, on the other hand, he had been consulted, and had assented to the alterations made in the rules and regulations, he it was who was guilty of dereliction of duty in this matter. He trusted that the Treasury and the Post Office would be able to take immediate steps to enable the old regulations to remain in force, and to allow two or three trustees, as the case might be, to withdraw money from the Savings Bank.

THE SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr. JACKSON) (Leeds, N.) said, he could answer the hon Member at once upon this point. It had been found that these new regulations required in some respects to be revised; and certainly for a fortnight past the question had been engaging the attention of the Post Office, the Treasury, and their solicitors with a view of meeting the difficulty referred to by the hon. Member. He trusted that in a very short time the revised edition—if he might use the term—of the regulations would be circulated, and that these might meet the points raised.

MR. HOWELL asked, whether anything could be done to obviate the difficulties which might arise in the mean time—that was to say, before the Treasury arrived at a conclusion in the matter?

MR. JACKSON said, he would make inquiries.

MR. TOMLINSON (Preston) asked, whether the reply of the hon. Gentleman the Secretary to the Treasury would apply equally to Trustee Savings Banks as to the Post Office Savings Banks? He pointed out that in some respects the rules of Trustee Savings Banks gave less facilities for withdrawals to depositors than the rules of the Post Office Savings Banks, particularly in the case of the withdrawal of money belonging to deceased depositors.

MR. JACKSON believed the same inquiry had been prosecuted in that case.

MR. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM (Lanark, N.W.) said, that at this time of general rejoicing, of fat turkeys and plum pudding, and holly, and merry Christmases, he regretted, and he was sure many hon. Members shared his regret, that they were going to separate again without discussing the question of the unemployed and the distress existing among the population, and without any opportunity being afforded to hon. Members of discussing any specific cases of distress, one of which he intended to bring before the House. He disclaimed any intention of making Party capital out of what he considered to be the wrongs of the poor. He did not care from which side relief came. The Liberal Party were at least as much to blame as the Conservative; in fact, the latter Party had made no parade as to what they intended to do for the poor when they came into Office. What did they find, however, was the attitude of the Liberal Party? Why, when the distress in the East of London was referred to, gentlemen calling themselves Liberal leaders had gone into distant parts of the Metropolis, and had pointed out as a panacea for the prevailing distress the taxation of ground-rents. They might just as well talk of relieving distress by taxing polo ponies or pug dogs. At this Christmas time, when hon. Members were so happy, when the poor were starving so comfortably around them, and the dock labourers were enduring pitiable suffering, more drastic legislation was wanted than the taxation of ground-rents, which was entirely a bourgeois and middle-class question. He hoped some assurance would be given by the Government, or some pledge from the Front Opposition Bench, of legislation in the future for shortening the hours of labour, or home colonization, or some scheme for taking away the scandal of people walking about the streets wishing to work and finding no work. One hundred thousand paupers a-week were relieved in this Metropolis. Then, as a specific case, he would refer to what might be called "miserable England," and was generally known as the Black Country, whose wretchedness even religion was impotent to console, and which was deprived of everything which made life worth living; a district not 15 miles from the constituency represented by the noble Lord the Member for West Birmingham—he begged pardon, but, "coming events cast their shadows before,"—represented by that smug statesman——

MR. SPEAKER: Order, order! I must remind the hon. Gentleman that although I was most unwilling to interfere, especially upon such a question, I understood he was going to ask a question. I do not think a general disquisition on the state of the poor in any district would be relevant to the Appropriation Bill. If the hon. Member can attach his remarks to any particular Minister or Department he may be in Order.

MR. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM said, that he wished to call the attention of the President of the Local Government Board to the condition of the Darlaston gun-lock filers.

MR. SPEAKER said, that if the hon. Gentleman could allege that there had been any neglect of duty on any Minister's part with reference to this particular class of workmen, he would be in Order; but it would not be relevant to discuss generally the condition of the poor or to allude to future legislation.

MR. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM said, that he desired to call attention to the infrequency of the visits of the sanitary inspectors both at Darlaston and Cradley Heath, and the unsanitary condition of the workshops. Owing to the unsanitary condition of the district the workpeople of Darlaston were suffering from an attack of enteric fever. This district he could say, from personal experience, was the most miserable in "miserable England." He had himself seen men and women working in a workshop not 10 feet square with open drains running before their houses, and no attempt at sanitation under any circumstances, and, according to Mr. Burnett's report, "fumes of filth rising in the nostrils of these people whilst they are working, which renders their toil one which constituted a scandal." There was no adequate inspection whatever, and he would ask the right hon. Gentleman the President of the Local Government Board to give these workpeople a distinct pledge that there would be more factory inspectors appointed, and that something would be done to urge the Local Authorities to fulfil the obligations which they did not fulfil at present and bring about a state of things more consonant with our civilization. As he was not allowed to raise the question of the wages of these people, he would content himself by making the strongest appeal he could to Members on both sides of the House not to let this occasion slip of doing a little good. He would remind hon. Members that these unfortunate people looked to this House as their only resource in this matter, and he hoped that on both sides of the House there would be a disposition not to let the Eastern Question or the Irish Question stand in the way of applying a remedy to this crying evil. They blamed both Parties for allowing this state of things to go on and accumulate, because it had been known for the last 40 or 50 years, and Royal Commissions had sat and reported upon it, but no responsible statesman from either side of the House had thought fit to get up in his place and say something should be done for these poor people.

Mr. STAVELEY HILL (Staffordshire, Kingswinford) said, that as connected with the district specially referred to by the hon. Member, he was bound to say that the hon. Member mixed up the two places of Darlaston and Cradley Heath in a most extraordinary manner. These two places were in different Counties, and were not connected in any way, the trades carried on in each being totally distinct. In point of fact, the gun-lock filers were now getting better wages than they used formerly to receive. He could assure the hon. Member that he himself and others were at least as deeply interested in this question as the hon. Member, and were doing their best to improve matters. In regard to the Cradley Heath workpeople, it should be remembered that their labour was not carried on in factories, but in private shops, families working together, and it must naturally be supposed that it was difficult to institute a proper system of inspection with regard to these places. They resented interference. Things had improved; but the trade of the workers at Cradley Heath would, he feared, never improve, as the nailmakers were unable to compete with the cheap nails imported from abroad, and he was therefore in favour of their turning their attention to some other trade. There were persons in the neighbourhood—in particular the hon. Member for Dudley (Mr. B. Robinson), whose energy it was impossible to overrate—who sympathized with these poor people quite as warmly as the hon. Member for Lanarkshire.

Mr. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM said, he was perfectly aware that Darlaston was eight miles distant from Cradley Heath, but he dissented from the statement of the hon. Member that these chainmakers refused to have their condition——

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, order! The hon. Member has exhausted his right to make a speech.

Dr. FARQUHARSON (Aberdeenshire, W.) asked, if there was really a fever epidemic in Cradley Heath. He had seen the statement contradicted, and if it was true there was fever there the President of the Local Government Board ought to send down an Inspector to report to him on the subject.

The PRESIDENT of the LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD (Mr. Ritchie) (Tower Hamlets, St. George's) said, that no one could complain of the hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr. Cunninghame Graham) for referring to the general question of the unemployed poor in London. It was one of vital importance. All hon. Members would go to their Christmas holidays with more pleasure if they felt they could do anything to alleviate the unsatisfactory condition in which a large number of their fellow-citizens were placed. The hon. Gentleman said that nothing had been done, but in this he was somewhat mistaken. The Government had consented to the appointment of two Committees, whose inquiries had considerable bearing on this matter; one on the sweating system, the other on the importation of foreign labour. Until those Committees reported it would be impossible for the Government to suggest any mode of proceeding for meeting any of the difficulties which it was alleged were connected with both those subjects. He was glad, indeed, to be able to think that, as the hon. Member himself had hinted, though there is a large amount of distress—as, indeed, there must always be in a great city like London—yet that there was less than there was last year. He thought it was a very satisfactory feature in the condition of the people of the Metropolis that they had now something like 2,000 or 3,000 less paupers here than they had at this time last year. The hon. Member pointed to legislation as a remedy for existing evils, but he did not venture to say on what particular points the legislation could be satisfactorily entered upon.

MR. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM: I was out of Order in going into it.

MR. RITCHIE said, he did not desire to blame the hon. Member, but the question of legislation connected with these matters was one of the most difficult problems to solve. In these matters it was extremely difficult to know how to deal with the evils which they all desired to alleviate. It could easily be conceived that legislation such as some people suggest would be more likely to intensify the distress rather than to alleviate it. He ventured to think that if public works or matters of that kind had been started last year, such as were suggested in more than one quarter, instead of having to deal this year with a less amount of pauperism than last year, they would have had to deal with an increased amount of pauperism. He could assure the hon. Member that all matters connected with the people gave great anxiety to those who filled the post which he now had the honour to hold, and to Her Majesty's Government; and he did not think any political considerations would prevent either Party from doing their utmost to alleviate the unhappy amount of distress which they all alike acknowledged and deplored. Then the hon. Member went on to speak of the wages of the gun-lock filers. On this point he would only remark that the Home Secretary, and not the President of the Local Government Board, was responsible for the factory inspectors. There was, however, one question in connection with a portion of the hon. Member's observations relating to the general sanitary condition of Cradley Heath, which was a matter affecting the Department over which he presided. He was aware that a very considerable number of cases of fever had occurred in the neighbourhood, apart altogether from the general question of the sanitary condition of Cradley Heath, in consequence of the inhabitants having drunk water from a well which the Department had often urged should be disused. That well had now been closed, the handle of the pump had been removed, and a standpipe had been put up by a water company of the neighbourhood from which the people could now draw their water supply. They hoped that as a result of the change there would be a considerable improvement in the sanitary condition of the neighbourhood. He was bound to say, however, that he was by no means satisfied with the general sanitary condition of the neighbourhood. The Department had made more than one inquiry into the matter. They had again and again urged the Sanitary Authority to provide proper sewers for the neighbourhood, but, notwithstanding the urgency with which they had made representations to the authorities, no satisfactory arrangements had yet been made. But the Local Government Board had no power to compel Sanitary Authorities to do the duty which rested upon them unless the Board received proper representations from some of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. He stated a few days ago that even a representation by one inhabitant that certain clauses of the Public Health Act had not been put properly in force by the Local Authority would be sufficient to enable the Local Government Board to move in the matter. Unless they got some representation from those most interested in the matter, the Local Government Board could not move. He should imagine that there could be no difficulty whatever in obtaining such representations from the neighbourhood as would enable the Local Government Board to call upon the Sanitary Authorities to carry out the clauses of the Act; and if the authorities then refused to fulfil their obligations the Board could go to the High Court and obtain a mandamus to compel them. As far as the Government were concerned, they would do their utmost to secure a better condition of things.

MR. CALDWELL said, he noticed that some of the newspapers put down his conduct last night as that of Obstruction. He, therefore, thought it right to say, in view of that allegation, that while the Estimates were in Committee, at the suggestion of Members of the Government, he agreed to postpone a great many matters interesting to the people of Scotland so that the Estimates might be concluded. Indeed, on nearly every occasion he had voted for the closure with the view of promoting the dispatch of Business. Although he maintained his rights last night to be heard on a small point, his object in getting the opinion of the Committee upon it was because he desired to get to Scotland by the morning train. No one was probably more entitled to get relief from the duties of Parliament than he was, as not many had been more regular in attendance. Although, therefore, he had shown a little of Scottish pertinacity last night, he had a special reason for so doing. The point he desired to raise had reference to the appropriation of the different moneys between England, Scotland, and Ireland. Though he understood the Government were about to consider and make up the Estimates for next year, which were to be submitted at an early period of the Session, he apprehended this was the only opportunity he would have of asking the Government to reconsider the principle upon which those Grants in Aid were to be distributed between England, Scotland, and Ireland. It would be unfair, therefore, to lose the present opportunity of calling attention to the principle upon which the grants were disposed of in this Bill. There had already been passed the Probate Duty for England, Scotland, and Ireland, and that Bill dealt with the appropriation of Grants in Aid upon the principle of nationalities. In Scotland they did not object to the Grants in Aid being determined upon strictly national lines, nor according to population, as in the case of England and Ireland. What they did object to was the double principle which was in operation at the present moment. The principle of nationality had been established in distributing the Probate Duty; but, under the Appropriation Bill, England got a much larger share of money for local purposes than was given to Scotland in proportion to the population. He maintained that they ought to proceed on a definite principle—namely, the principle of nationality. But it was unfair to allow England to dip into the Imperial purse for what in Scotland had to be paid out of local taxation. For instance, in Scotland they might wish to have a considerable portion of the Grant in Aid given for free education. What was the contention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on that point? The right hon. Gentleman said that would be unfair, as the people of England would also be wanting free education. But if Scotland paid for it out of the money given, what right had England to interfere? He thought they were fairly entitled to object to England appropriating out of the Imperial purse money out of all proportion to her population and to what she paid into the National Exchequer. The people of Scotland paid into the Imperial Exchequer, per head of the population, as much, if not more, than the people of England, and, in all fairness, they ought to get as much out of the Imperial grant according to population. Any denial of that principle would not be tolerated by the people of Scotland. The population of Scotland was about 4,000,000. The only way to give justice to nationalities was by a sub-division of the Grants in Aid according to the populations of the respective nationalities. He hoped that principle would be considered by the Government when they came to prepare their scheme of Estimates next year. There would be an almost unanimous opposition on the part of the Scottish Members to the continuance of the Estimates on the lines on which they were based this year. As the Home Secretary, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the President of the Local Government Board, all Members of the Scotch Education Department, were present, he would call attention to that Department. It was not often they had an opportunity of addressing its Members. Irish Members talked of Castle rule, but they had something of the same kind in Scotland. It was very curious that that Department should consist chiefly of Members of that House who were in no way connected with Scotland, and who knew nothing about the peculiarities of Scottish education. The result was that the whole of the education of Scotland was managed by a permanent official in London. The people of Scotland objected to that. He had put a Question as to the parish of Barvas, where the school rate was 5*s.* 4*d.* in the £1. Would it not occur to any Statesman that that was a case where the parish ought to pay for its own expenses? The situation of that parish made it a complete exception to any ordinary rule. He ventured to say there was never a grosser case of injustice and a more heartless case of cruelty than to make the Parochial Board pay 5*s.* 4*d.* of school rate alone, and they had poor rates and other rates in addition. It was conduct such as that which showed how the Government was proceeding, for the Government had done nothing, even although it was in their power, to remedy a case of this kind by bringing in special legislation. The object of the Government was to relieve people who required relief. In the adjoining parish to Barvas the people only paid 2*d.* in the £1 of school rate.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square): What is the name of the parish?

MR. CALDWELL said, he forgot the name of it; but it was the adjoining parish to Barvas.

MR. GOSCHEN: It is quite exceptional.

DR. CLARK (Caithness) said, that that parish was made up of shooting tenancies and large grazing farms.

MR. CALDWELL asked, if it was fair that a man in one parish should pay 5*s.* 4*d.*, while a man in the adjoining parish should only pay 2*d.* The poorer the man was, the more he had to pay. It was the duty of the Government to consider the condition in which these people were living. They were living in a state of abject poverty. To show the heartlessness of the Scotch Education Department, he might state that the Department pointed out that if the children paid school fees the amount would be £280. The idea that £280 could be collected in school fees in that parish would occur to nobody but a Department sitting in London knowing nothing of the circumstances. In another parish the school-rate was 4*s.* 6*d.* and the rental was under 15*s.* per head of the population. That placed it in a similar condition to Barvas. These things had been going on for years. The people had been in rebellion before on account of their poverty. Did anyone wonder that there should be a rebellion among the people on account of their poverty? They were being charged rents which the Crofters Commission had within the last few days reduced by 42 per cent. That was the reason why they had disturbances in Lewis. The Government had seen this educational crisis going on, and they had done nothing to remove the cause of it. The Government ought to have interfered long ago. It was their duty, as an Imperial Government, to deal with exceptional distress in the United Kingdom, but they had abandoned their Imperial principles. They would not treat the matter as one involving responsibilities on the Imperial Government, but they wished to wait until they could treat it as a Scottish matter, until Scotland looked after her own poor. The Government were establishing the principle of nationalities in their mode of treatment. He wished the matter to be treated Imperially. If they were to have matters relegated to Scotland in that way, the people of Scotland should insist that the management of the educational interests of their country should also be relegated to them, and should not be left to be managed by a permanent official in London. There was no reason or principle why the Scottish Education Department should not be relegated to Scotland, instead of consisting of three Gentleman who sat on the Treasury Bench, and probably had very little interest in Scotland.

DR. CLARK said, that the matter raised by the hon. Member for the St. Rollox Division of Glasgow was a very serious one, and he hoped the Government would give it serious attention. The Island of Lewis was fast going back into a primitive condition of barbarism. Order and law would have to be put into a crucible, and they would have to re-constitute society there, unless something was done within the next few months. In the parishes of Barvas, Lochs, and Uig, the School Boards were resigning, because they could not get the money required to keep up the expensive schools they had been compelled to build. He did not think the Government knew that. In those parishes they had not only compelled the boards to build expensive schools, but to put a wall round the playgrounds, whereas for miles round the moor was a playground. By this policy they had many School Boards bankrupt, who had applied under the Act for the Parochial Boards to raise money. The Parochial Board had refused to impose a school-rate of 5*s.* 4*d.*, and had offered 1*s.* Things were even worse than the hon. Member for St. Rollox had pointed out. A few days ago the Crofters Commission had issued some decisions by which they had reduced the rents by 53 per cent all over the district, and wiped off 91 per cent of arrears. That would prove beyond possibility of doubt that there had been rack-rents in Lewis, or else the Commission had been very unjust indeed. The Parochial Boards would not be able to raise sufficient money, and the next stage would be the resignation of the Parochial Boards as well as the School Boards. He warned the House that the whole of Lewis, Skye, some parts of Sutherland, and, indeed, a great part of the Western Highlands, was becoming a great pauper ward. They would have nine-tenths of the people paupers unless they gave them more land, and they would require to establish some Imperial system, because the Parochial Boards would all have resigned office. As the result of the present system, Lady Matheson, who was the owner of this vast Island of Lewis, was compelled to pay poor-rates greater than the amount she received in rent, and she had probably lost a couple of thousand pounds through her crofters instead of making money by the land. The Court of Session could do nothing to relieve her, and she was bound to pay rates on the reductions of rent and arrears — money she never received. Lady Matheson was a life-renter, and she had gone, and he did not believe they would succeed in getting anything of the poor-rates from her or her tenants. Then they would have the Parochial Boards resigning, because there was no money to be got. The only solution of the problem in Lewis, as far as he saw, was to break up the deer-forests and large grazing farms, and give more land to the crofters. Scotland had great cause of complaint in the matter of local rates. It was intolerable that Parliament should vote money for the Imperial Exchequer for purposes in England and Ireland which in Scotland were met entirely out of local rates. In those cases also in which Grants in Aid were made for the Exchequer for certain purposes, the proportionate allocation to Scotland was far less than to England and Ireland. With regard to Bechuanaland, he regretted to learn that more armed police were to be sent, while nothing was being done to promote, by means of education and in other ways, the elementary conditions of civilization.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN (Mr. SEXTON) (Belfast, W.) said, he wished to bring before the House certain allegations against the character of Captain Seagrave, the Resident Magistrate who was in charge of the Constabulary at Mitchelstown last year, when three lives were taken by the Forces of the Crown, who, as had been admitted, had fired to kill. Captain Seagrave had further distinguished himself by sending a clergyman to gaol for three months as a common criminal. He (Mr. Sexton) thought it his duty to bring the matter before the notice of the House, as his hon. Friend the Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner), in making an earnest effort to bring it under public notice yesterday, had brought himself in conflict with the Chair. His hon. Friend made allegations of the gravest kind against Mr. Seagrave, on his own responsibility, and upon information which he believed to be credible and conclusive. It appears that Captain Seagrave was in South Africa in 1882, in command of a detachment, and it was alleged that he embezzled the moneys of the canteen, the property of the detachment, and that in the result Colonel Cherry, the officer in charge, wrote for an explanation, threatening him with arrest, and ordered the adjutant to write to the Adjutant General for the compulsory retirement of the officer. The second allegation was that Captain Seagrave appropriated to his own use a sum of £5, the property of a soldier in his detachment, which had been given to him to forward to England. On being questioned by his superior officer, he made the false statement that he had obtained a Post Office Order for the amount on a certain post office, and had forwarded it to England; and on inquiry being made it was found that he had never obtained an order for that amount at the post office mentioned. The third allegation was the gravest of all. It was said that Captain Seagrave, having first exploited the funds of the canteen, in the second place exploited the money of a soldier intrusted to his charge—he then exploited the funds of the Government. It was alleged that he had embezzled the money intrusted to him to pay the men of his detachment. In consequence of this, telegrams were sent to the Standard Bank and all its branches in South Africa not to honour his cheques; an officer was sent to relieve him—as it was euphemistically called—of his detachment, and he was placed under arrest. Three officers, whose names were given, having been duly constituted a Court of Investigation, unanimously recommended the instant dismissal of Captain Seagrave, and their report was acted upon by the authorities. He (Mr. Sexton) was not aware whether these allegations were true; but, as the hon. Member for Mid Cork had been unable to bring the matter plainly and clearly under the notice of the House, he felt it his duty to do so. These allegations having now been brought under the notice of the Government, public opinion would not tolerate any evasion of the subject. He could not imagine the Government shirking an inquiry. If they did, the shame and the injury would fall on themselves. If the Government refused to institute an immediate inquiry into the matter, it would be the duty and the right of anyone in Ireland who was summoned to appear before this man to refuse to attend, whatever might be the consequences. It was the right of the Irish people, who had to submit to this man on the Bench—when, if what had been said was true, he should be in the dock—that an investigation should be at once instituted into the charges against Captain Seagrave.

MR. PHILIPPS (Lanark, Mid) said, Cradley Heath had been described by Lord Beaconsfield in one of his novels as "The Hell Hole of England." That showed that its condition was not an affair of yesterday, and that nothing could be done by private agency. Public action ought now to be taken. After the legislation for Ireland, he failed to see how the Government could refuse to undertake public works in Cradley Heath for the amelioration of the condition of the people. The President of the Local Government Board had stated that it was difficult to get the people to sanction Government interference; but he was told that they were now ready to accept it; he wished to know whether the Government would promise to consider any scheme for bringing the people under the factory system, seeing that they had urged the hon. Member for North-West Lanarkshire (Mr. Cunninghame Graham) to press forward their case for this interference?

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL (Kirkcaldy, &c.) said, he knew nothing about the charges against Captain Seagrave, but he had hopelessly failed in competition for the Army. Then he went out to South Africa, enlisted as a private, subsequently taking service under a Zulu Chief. On his return to Ireland, Captain Seagrave was appointed a Resident Magistrate. It did seem to him if the resident magistracy of Ireland was made up in that way, it was impossible the people could have any confidence in them. What he rose for principally, however, was to apologize to the Chancellor of the Exchequer with regard to what passed yesterday as to the Soudan. The right hon. Gentleman took the high ground that the declarations of the Government had been so clear and explicit that it was almost an insult to question further as to any possible intention to advance into the Soudan. It should be remembered that that poor House was, after all, one of the bodies of the State, and it would be a great comfort to hon. Members if they could get some of the crumbs of comfort which fell from the rich man's table in another place. If he had known what declarations had been made in the House of Lords he should not have pressed his questions, because those declarations were most explicit and satisfactory. Nothing could be more proper than the policy indicated by the head of the Government on the previous night in "another place." He quite agreed that the Government could not possibly negotiate with the tribes for the reason that they had nothing to offer them; and he was delighted to know that the Government had no intention of taking charge of the Suakin district or any other district of the Soudan. It would have been well, however, if this declaration had been made in the House of Commons.

MR. CAREW (Kildare, N.) said, he was obliged to call attention to the brutal attack made by the police on the people of Naas on the 3rd of this month. There had been many attacks by the police in Ireland on meetings of the people in different parts of the country, but none more wanton and unprovoked than that to which he was about to refer. On the date in question there had been several prosecutions at Naas, and a number of the most respectable citizens were sentenced to imprisonment. Naturally there was some excitement, but popular feeling was kept well under control, and there was no disturbance and no riot. At the close of the day the band of the local branch of the Gaelic Athletic Association turned out and played some popular airs. After about 15 minutes they returned, and were in the act of playing the final tune opposite their bandroom before dispersing, when, without one word of warning, they were set upon by a party of police, who knocked down the leader of the band, pushed its other members about, and kicked their instruments about the street. This unjustifiable violence they followed up by attacking the crowd more savagely, sparing neither sex nor age, and inflicting very serious injury on several persons. Not content with dispersing the crowd in this fashion, they scoured the lanes and bye-streets for further victims, and, subsequently, procured reinforcements from the barracks to aid them in the work. In the meantime, Father Kinsella, a clergyman who had never mixed in politics, and who came down the street solely on a mission of peace and humanity, was seized by the throat by a ruffianly constable, who raised his baton at the same time as if to strike, but the policeman's hand was seized at that moment by a civilian who happened to be passing, and thus possibly a Coroner's inquest was averted. The Solicitor General for Ireland had stated that the disturbance was commenced by the stoning of the police, but he (Mr. Carew) had unimpeachable evidence to the contrary. He had on his side the evidence of Mr. Warmington, a bank manager of Naas, who was an Englishman and a Protestant, and, if anything, an anti-Nationalist. This gentleman, when questioned by a newspaper reporter as to what had actually occurred, said that the conduct of the people seemed to be more like that of school-children playing than anything else; that everything was of the most innocent character; that after the baton charge there was some disorder, and some stones were flung; and that if the police had been kept in their barracks and had not interfered, all unpleasantness would have been avoided and no disturbance would have occurred. They had also the evidence of the Coroner, who, in his medical capacity, had to attend several of the victims of the police violence, and who was so disgusted at the wantonness of the attack upon the people that evening, that he threw up his post of medical adviser to the police. Several other gentlemen, whose impartiality could not be questioned, also gave testimony that the attack by the police was perfectly unprovoked. These statements could only be fairly tested by a sworn inquiry into the conduct of the police. This brutal and savage assault by the police had caused a good deal of indignation amongst all classes of the community. A general meeting of the inhabitants of Naas, including all shades of politics, unanimously condemned the bâton charges by the police as unprovoked and without warning, and demanded a sworn inquiry into the conduct of the police officers who were in authority on the occasion. A similar resolution was passed by the Board of Guardians, which included amongst its members prominent members of the so-called loyal minority, like Baron de Robeck. He might mention that Head Constable M'Farlane, who was in command of the baton party, had been severely reprimanded by Judge Day at the Belfast Riots Commission for permitting plain clothes policemen under his control to attack inoffensive boys and girls on the Shankhill Road. The Government were bound to make fair and full investigation into this matter.

MR. WADDY (Lincolnshire, Brigg) said, that during that Session almost scores of cases of complaint had been brought before the notice of the Members of the Irish Government in that House; but in hardly a single instance was a definite and categorical answer given by them. The hon. Member for North Kildare (Mr. Carew) had that day brought forward a charge, supported by credible and unbiased evidence, against the police; and no explanation had been afforded of the matter; no sworn inquiry had been made; and the only information they received was that a secret police inquiry had been held with nobody present to check the statements offered. With regard to the case of Captain Seagrave, he would only say that, when an hon. Member made such charges in the House as had been made by the hon. Member for West Belfast (Mr. Sexton), it was not enough to offer anything but the fullest inquiry. He had had some experience of the procedure of Resident Magistrates' Courts, and beyond saying that it was orderly and conducted with courtesy, nothing could be said in its favour. He had been present when the cases of the Vandeleur evictions had been tried. One of the incidents of the evictions had been the beating down of certain houses. It was suggested at the time that proper notices had not been served; but, whether that were so or not, the great mistake had been made of attacking the wrong house. The person whose house had been wrongfully attacked took out a summons against the Resident Magistrate (Colonel Turner), the Sheriff, and others involved; and the case had come before the very same Magistrates who had been convicting and sentencing the tenants. A solicitor, who said he was instructed by Dublin Castle, had objected to the case being gone into at all, but the Magistrates, deeming this an insufficient excuse, had sought for a better one. It was stated that the Magistrate who had signed the summons was one who usually did not sit in that particular Court, the fact being that application had been made to the proper Magistrate, Mr. Walsh, who had declined to sign the summons because he was involved with Colonel Turner in the case. The Magistrates had accordingly marked the summons "no rule," and had refused to state reasons for so doing. He would ask hon. and learned Gentlemen on the Treasury Bench whether they would justify such a proceeding, and whether they thought there was a Police Court in England in which the Magistrate would refuse to hear a case which it was his duty to adjudicate upon? Would the hon. and learned Gentleman the Solicitor General for Ireland let them have in this matter an honest and independent inquiry?

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR IRELAND (Mr. MADDEN) (Dublin University) said, it appeared to him, after the testimony which the hon. and learned Gentleman had borne to the demeanour of the Resident Magistrates in the Court over which they presided, and the testimony which the Courts of Appeal had also borne to the correctness of their decisions that the case in their defence was pretty complete. The hon. and learned Gentleman said that he was present at several cases heard by the Resident Magistrates, and that the proceedings were orderly and the demeanour of the magistrates was courteous, and yet he took it upon himself to assert that these gentlemen were biased up to the eyes. Did the hon. and learned Gentleman recognize the gravity of his statement, which was not one that should be lightly made? As to the case arising out of the Coolroe evictions, he could tell the House that there was no objection to entering upon it, because the correctness of the decision of the Resident Magistrates had been affirmed. The hon. and learned Member asked, with reference to the proceedings arising out of the Vandeleur evictions, whether he would defend the Magistrates for refusing to entertain a certain summons? To that he would reply that before pronouncing an opinion he must know all the circumstances of the case. The Magistrates either had jurisdiction or they had not. If they had no jurisdiction they were bound to refuse to entertain the summons.

MR. WADDY: That they had no jurisdiction was never suggested.

MR. MADDEN said, that this was the question in the case, and that if they had jurisdiction the remedy was simple—the person whose summons they refused to hear could have applied to the Superior Courts for a mandamus. He had also been asked by the Lord Mayor of Dublin (Mr. Sexton), supported by the hon. and learned Gentleman who had last spoken (Mr. Waddy), what the Government intended to do with regard to what he said about Captain Seagrave. That was a matter of a totally different character, and he would ask the House in all fairness to consider the facts which he now laid before it. The first he had heard of these alleged transactions was on Wednesday, when the hon. Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner) read in his place in the House a letter which he had received, and which contained these scandalous charges. Now he thought, and in all common fairness, it should be remembered by any Member of that House, and by any member of the public who considered the matter, that these charges, whatever be the foundation for them, were brought against this gentleman on the very concluding days of the Session, when there would be no time for such an inquiry as would have enabled him to lay any facts there might be, if such there were, before the House in contradiction of the charge so brought, and, further, that the accusation was brought under circumstances which would prevent that gentleman, if unjustly assailed, from vindicating his character by proceedings in a Court of Law. He, therefore, thought the House and the public would do well to suspend their judgment in a case of this kind, having regard to the circumstances under which these charges were brought forward.

MR. SEXTON: Have you telegraphed for information?

MR. MADDEN said, the hon. Member must be aware that since the matter was first brought before the House there was not time to investigate it. But this he would say—if either the hon. Member who had received the letter, or the writer, or any person who attached credence to it, chose to bring the matter before the authorities, of course there would be an investigation. He, however, strongly deprecated the House or the public forming a judgment with regard to the conduct of this gentleman upon statements made in a way which afforded him no opportunity of vindicating his character in a Court of Justice, and brought forward in the manner which he had mentioned.

MR. SEXTON said, he did not ask any person to form a judgment; he only asked that means should be given to form an accurate judgment.

MR. MADDEN admitted that the hon. Gentleman had not prejudged the case.

MR. WADDY observed that he specifically stated that he did not prejudge the matter, and that all Members on that side wanted was an open and sworn inquiry into the truth or falsity of the allegations.

MR. MADDEN said, he admitted that the hon. and learned Member suspended his judgment, and he hoped every Member of the House would follow his example. As to the matter which occurred at Naas, the circumstances as related to him differed materially from what had been stated by the hon. Member for North Kildare (Mr. Carew). On that very day, some hours before the attack was made upon the police, a speech was delivered in the town by the hon. Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner), in which the police were denounced in violent terms. According to the information before him, shortly after that speech an attack with stones was made upon the police in the public street, and it was in consequence of that attack that the police took what would be acknowledged to be the proper step in such circumstances by clearing the streets. No person appeared to have been seriously injured. The hon. Member for North Kildare read a statement from a local paper which he thought contradictory of that which he laid before the House. But, according to Mr. Warmington's own statement, he was not in the street at the time, but in the office of the bank of which he was manager; and he was not in a position to see what was going on, because at a certain point of the transaction he turned off the gas so that he might be able to see what was occurring. All that Mr. Warmington's statement amounted to was that from the position he occupied he saw no stones thrown. The police appeared to have done their duty without unnecessary violence, and no one was seriously injured.

MR. J. O'CONNOR (Tipperary, S.) said, the speech of the Solicitor General for Ireland showed it was the special province of the Law Officers of the Crown in the House to uphold the Resident Magistrates in Ireland, no matter what they did; but the statement that the Magistrates of Ireland and all those connected with the administration of the law in that country were above the law had not been contradicted. That was the lesson that was taught the people of Ireland, and he was surprised that it had not borne more bitter fruit. The charge against Captain Seagrave was made on Wednesday, and up till then he had not denied it.

They had been asked by the Government whether there was any truth in the charge. Some kind of inquiry had been promised, but would Captain Seagrave be suspended in the meantime? The charge had been made by an hon. Member of that House, and, although that hon. Member was at present under the censure of the Chair, that did not take his position from him, nor did it detract from the gravity of the charge. It was not respectful to Members of the House that the hon. and learned Gentleman should belittle the manner in which the charge was made. He had seen Captain Seagrave present at meetings which were suppressed, and asserted that he was a hard and cruel magistrate, and quite unfit to have the liberties of Her Majesty's subjects in his hands. The Government which maintained that man in office was not calculated to inspire confidence in the minds of the people. What sort of inquiry was to be made? One set on foot by the Castle would not satisfy that House. The charge made by the hon. Member for North Kildare had been dismissed by the Solicitor General in a very light manner. To suppress meetings appeared to be a sure means of obtaining promotion from the Government. The fact was that the magistracy and the police force of Ireland was simply nothing but organized and armed ruffianism. The published report of an interview between a reporter and a Dr. Smith showed that the attack of the police was unprovoked. The statement of that witness was not open to the objections taken by the Solicitor General for Ireland to the evidence of Mr. Warmington, as Dr. Smith was in the street and between the crowd and the police before the attack took place. The fact was they suffered very much from the conduct of the police and the Magistrates in Ireland. And he was not surprised that a man of the excitable temperament of his hon. Friend the Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner) had got into conflict with the Chairman yesterday when referring to the case of Captain Seagrave. Many hon. Members opposite who cheered at the suspension of his hon. Friend——

SIR JOHN COLOMB (Tower Hamlets, Bow, &c.) rose to Order, and asked whether the hon. Member was in Order in referring to the suspension of the hon. Member for Mid Cork?

MR. SPEAKER said, he did not see the relevancy of the matter.

MR. JOHN O'CONNOR said, that taking into consideration the conduct of the organized ruffianism of the police and the decisions of the Magistrates and the defence of their illegal and wanton proceedings by the Front Bench, he wondered, indeed, that more occasions were not taken for private vengeance on those Magistrates and police. The Chief Secretary had defended men of bad character and tyrants in Ireland day after day in a way that would have aroused resentment and retaliation in any country of the world but Ireland. That retaliation had not occurred was due to the fact that Irish Members did all in their power to restrain the people. He hoped there would be such amendment in this matter on the part of the Executive that they would not witness the recurrence of deeds they might have to regret in Ireland.

COLONEL NOLAN (Galway, N.) said, he wished to refer briefly to what he might call the crying evil of the want of University education in Ireland. The British Parliament voted large sums for University education in Ireland, but they got extremely little for their money, because that money was administered against the whole wishes and spirit of the people. The people of the country would not go to the Universities in sufficient numbers unless those Colleges were in consonance with their religious belief. He was not against the Protestant Colleges at all, but he objected to the money all going to one Protestant and three Secular Colleges, while three-fourths of the population were Catholics, who were anxious to get the benefits of their religion in conjunction with the University system. He would propose that the Colleges of Galway and Cork should be made Catholic, and that the endowments of Trinity College should be re-distributed so as to be more in accordance with the wants of the present day. If the Government by such a policy could divert the attention of the country into other channels they would find that the Vote for the Constabulary would rapidly diminish, and that the time of the House would not be so constantly occupied with questions of law and order.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER (Mr. GOSCHEN) (St. George's, Hanover Square) said, that the hon. and gallant Gentleman the Member for North Galway (Colonel Nolan), on the subject of University education in Ireland, certainly found a most sympathetic listener in him. Long before the hon. and gallant Gentleman was in Parliament he (Mr. Goschen) took a great interest in the question, and many of those who were now denounced as enemies of the Irish race did their best to secure benefits in that direction to the Irish people. He held the hon. and gallant Gentleman to his word, that if the Government took steps to improve education in Ireland, and also to deal with public works, they would find there was not so much need for the police. [Colonel NOLAN: Hear, hear!] He acknowledged the hon. and gallant Gentleman's solitary cheer, but it would have been more satisfactory if it had been echoed by his friends. The hon. Member for Tipperary (Mr. John O'Connor) spoke, if not in a violent, at all events in a very forcible manner, and he told the House that he and his friends were doing their best to restrain the people of Ireland. Well, if it was by speeches such as that which they had listened to from him this afternoon that he endeavoured to restrain the people, he could not expect a satisfactory result from his oratory. He presumed that speech was meant not so much for the House, but was delivered rather for the purpose of being printed and published in Ireland. In that speech the hon. Gentleman palliated and excused private vengeance on the police. That speech was to be reprinted in Ireland, and then the hon. Member told them his object was to restrain the people in Ireland, and that he and his friends did their best to accomplish that object. The hon. Member was very eloquent and energetic on the point that there would be a close inquiry into the charges against Captain Seagrave, and that no publicity would be given to the matter; and he censured the Solicitor General for Ireland because he said the hon. and learned Gentleman had belittled the accusation, which was repeated by the Lord Mayor of Dublin.

MR. SEXTON: If you want to know exactly what the Lord Mayor of Dublin did, he repeated the statements made by the hon. Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner) two days ago on information supplied by a correspondent.

MR. GOSCHEN said, he did not gather that the right hon. Gentleman endorsed the charges.

MR. SEXTON: I have no information.

MR. GOSCHEN said, he did not know how far the hon. Member for Mid Cork endorsed them. All they knew was that a correspondent, whose name was not made known to the House, had communicated these charges to the hon. Member for Mid Cork. He thought the indignation of tone assumed by the hon. Member for Tipperary should have been reserved until he came to know more with regard to the truth of these accusations. Of course they must be inquired into, and would be inquired into. They would be inquired into in the manner which the Government believed best calculated to elicit the truth. But hon. Members called for the suspension of this magistrate in the interval, and they did so on the strength of a letter, the name of the writer of which they did not even know at present. He reserved his judgment as entirely as any Member, but he protested against the doctrine that any public officer was to be suspended because of a letter written to a Member of that House, the very author of which was unknown, to the House. He was sure hon. Members opposite themselves must see that it would be impossible to suspend a public officer on such information. Hon. Members said they did not expect to be satisfied with a Government inquiry. How had this information been brought before the public? It had been put before the public under the privilege of that House, and if hon. Members distrusted the Government in regard to eliciting the truth and arriving at the bottom of these accusations, their course was open to them. Let them publish the letter in such a manner that the party accused might be able to defend and vindicate himself in a Court of Law, and in that case they would have every satisfaction, if they should not be satisfied with the inquiry to be made by the Government. With regard to the remarks of one of the Members for Lanarkshire as to the application of the Factory

Acts to the Cradley Heath district, and as to the industry there being willing to place itself under Government inspection, that was a matter which, of course, the Home Secretary would consider. The inclination of the Government would certainly be to bring under the Factory Acts every trade to which they could fairly be applied, and to bring to an end those deplorable conditions under which this industry was conducted. A suggestion was made, which he thought was extraordinary, considering that the hon. Member who made it belonged to a Party most anxious for the breaking up of great estates and multiplying the number of peasant proprietors.

MR. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM said, the earliest case was the case of the crofters in Scotland.

MR. GOSCHEN said, that land offered a security, but he did not see what security was offered with regard to the industry in the Cradley Heath district. Public funds ought never to be loaned except where there was security, and some certainty that actual good would result. The suggestion was that there should be relief works. It was thought that the refusal of Government to intervene was due to motives of hard-heartedness or carelessness; but it was rather because the proposal would do more harm than good to the very persons in whose behalf it was put forward. The hon. Member for Caithness (Dr. Clark) had pressed the Government to state why they were increasing the police in Bechuanaland, and protested against devoting money to that object. Well, he should like to say, in all courtesy to the hon. Gentleman, that he did not think the hon. Member was quite the man in that House to ask that particular question, because, while he was undoubtedly exercising his right as a Member of that House, he was also the official Representative of the Transvaal Republic, with an exequatur from the Republic; and therefore, in African policy, he thought they might deal with him as they would with the Representative of a friendly and neighbouring State, and should decline to discuss with him the situation of an adjoining country.

DR. CLARK said, it was purely an honorary office conferred on him some years ago for work he had done in trying to get back their independence. He had never got a farthing from the Government, and it had cost him money.

MR. GOSCHEN said, that no word of his had suggested that the hon. Member had been acting otherwise than in the most honourable manner.

DR. CLARK said, he had never done any service on behalf of the Transvaal Government, nor taken any action whatever, direct or indirect, on their behalf.

MR. GOSCHEN said, that in that case he must have been misinformed, because he had been told at the Foreign Office that the hon. Member received an exequatur from the Transvaal Republic which accredited him to this country.

DR. CLARK: Yes; but I have never been there since.

MR. GOSCHEN said, he had never heard that the exequatur had been withdrawn, and he understood it was not long granted. In saying this, however, the hon. Member would recognize that he did so only as showing that the hon. Member stood in an official position to the Transvaal Republic, and that his relations disqualified the Government from accepting him as an authority on the position of affairs in Bechuanaland. With regard to the strengthening of the police, the reason was that bands of filibusterers, coming occasionally, he thought, from the Transvaal Republic, had at times threatened Bechuanaland, or that part of it which was under the British Protectorate; and, that being so, we were under the regrettable necessity of having to increase the police. The hon. Member also joined with the hon. Member for the St. Rollox Division of Glasgow (Mr. Caldwell) in discussing the situation of Scotland as regarded the distribution of the Probate Duty grant, and especially as regarded the position of some parishes in the Lews. The hon. Member for St. Rollox was, he thought, more eloquent than he had ever heard him. He worked himself up into bursts of oratory; but while he was defending the cause of Scotland he really forgot that he was a Scotsman, for he said that the people of Scotland would endorse what he said. He (Mr. Goschen) believed the people of Scotland would repudiate the hon. Member, because they, above everything, liked a logical man; and never was there a greater want of logic than in the speech of his hon. Friend. He first argued as if Scotch education ought to be settled by Scottish authorities alone; but then he went on to contend that when there was a poor district where education had to be assisted there ought to be an Imperial grant for that particular district, so that Scotch education was to be a purely Scotch affair as regards its control, but an Imperial affair as regards the pecuniary responsibility. The hon. Member was not right in his facts any more than in his logic. He spoke of a certain number of Gentlemen on the Front Ministerial Bench as being responsible for Scottish education. He omitted the fact that Lord Lothian, Lord Watson, and Sir Francis Sandford were on the Scotch Education Board, and they were as high authorities as the hon. Gentleman himself.

MR. CALDWELL asked the right hon. Gentleman how many meetings of the Department Lord Watson had attended?

MR. GOSCHEN said, he could only say that Lord Lothian and Sir Francis Sandford had given great attention to these matters. But he could tell the hon. Gentleman that, poor ignorant Saxon as he (Mr. Goschen) was, he believed he knew more about the particular parishes of which the hon. Gentleman had spoken to-day than the hon. Member himself; and why? Because he had gone thoroughly into the matter with men who had come from the spot, with Inspectors and others. The particulars of very rate and salary had been examined. They had gone most thoroughly into every part of the business, knowing its extreme importance, and the difficulty of the deadlock which had occurred with regard to certain schools in the Lews. But, before saying a few words about those schools, he would like first to reply to the statement of the hon. Gentleman, that Scotland was badly treated as regarded Imperial grants. They had had a calculation made, and it appeared that per head of the population in England the rate of contribution was 4*s.* 10·3*d.*, while in Scotland it was 5*s.* 4·5*d.* Therefore, what hon. Members did was this: they selected certain cases in which Scotland seemed to be at a disadvantage as compared with England, while they left out all the other cases where Scotland received more. It was obviously impossible for him to enter at large upon that very important subject, but the Government had promised that they would deal with Scottish local finance as well as with Scottish local government in the coming Session, when the hon. Member and his Friends would have ample opportunity of examining all the figures; and he could assure the hon. Member that there would not be the slightest disposition to stint Scotland in any way. They were anxious that Scotland should have its full share in Imperial grants, and should not contribute more than it ought to contribute according to its population, wealth, and contributions to Imperial Revenue. To return to the districts where the schools were in difficulties, the hon. Member spoke as if the Government had neglected them. He thought he had said enough to show that the Government had given their personal attention to the matter, and he (Mr. Goschen) had himself gone as carefully into it as if he had been a Member of the School Board or of the Parochial Board of one of these parishes. It had been a very intricate question, and Lord Lothian and the permanent staff had examined it to the full; but the difficulties were enormous, and the Government were not content just to get over the immediate difficulty by inaugurating the principle that when School Boards became bankrupt the State was immediately to step in and relieve them from their anxieties, especially where, as in this case, there had been extremely lax administration, great extravagance, and where practically no fees at all had been collected. He acknowledged the poverty of many of the districts; but it was extraordinary that not more than £5 were collected in fees in four parishes in the Lews during three or four years. The neglect to make any attempt to collect fees was an important element in the case, and was one of the reasons why the Government considered that it was impossible for the State to step in and relieve the School Boards by the simple expedient of a grant. It would have been a most fearful precedent, and would have been holding out an encouragement to the School Boards in poor districts to run into hopeless debt, because then the public purse would be immediately open to them. He wished to point out—it was only right it should be pointed out—that while there was great poverty in the Lews, the rateable value had been enormously depreciated by the action of the population itself. Large properties —for instance, many sporting properties—that contributed largely to the rates had been entirely ruined. Anarchy had had its certain fatal effect in diminishing the total rateable value of the property in the parish. Wherever lawlessness prevailed, it affected the value of land and other property, and depreciation followed, and the land became, as he thought the hon. Member for Caithness had said, almost valueless. The hon. Member for St. Rollox, at the beginning of his statement—and that was another specimen of his Caledonian logic—pointed out that the heavy rates in those districts were wrung from the people. The hon. Member drew a terrible picture of the 5*s.* 4*d.* rate being wrung from a starving and suffering population. When the hon. Member made that remark, he said to a right hon. Colleague sitting beside him that if the Government contributed anything out of the Imperial funds for the relief of these very rates, it would be immediately said that it was not the population Government intended to relieve, but that their only object was to help the landlord out of his trouble. But little did he dream that the hon. Member himself would have said so before he came to the end of his speech. He left the Scottish readers of the hon. Member's eloquent speech to say how he could get out of the difficulty. Either the people paid the rates or the landlord did, or the people paid part and the landlord part. He did not think both paid the whole. The fact was, he believed, that neither paid in full. Lady Matheson, the proprietrix of the Lews, had been ruined. It had been shown that though she could not pay her rates in full, she yet actually paid more than the rents she received. No doubt the situation was most deplorable, and the Government were anxious to deal with the general situation by a scheme of emigration. The hon. Member for Caithness said more land ought to be given; but he likewise said, if the people had the land rent free, he did not believe they could exist on it. That being so, he presumed the hon. Member did not propose they should go elsewhere and take land from other landlords to supply the wants of these people. If the people could not exist, even though they got the land rent free, then emigration would be one of the best remedies, and the Government would earnestly entreat the House next Session to assist them in devising a scheme. On Monday next there would be published Minutes showing the whole history of the School Board difficulty referred to, and the measures the Government proposed to take to deal with the deadlock. The Government had no official information of the resignation of the School Boards; but, even if they had resigned, he did not know what evil effect it would have. But hon. Members would see from the Minutes what relief would be given. A Chief Inspector would be appointed to take the matter in hand, because if those parishes required special assistance, they must also put themselves under exceptional treatment as regarded the control of their finances. The Government had had before them educational budgets for each parish to show what relief was necessary. He trusted that their proposals, when they were known, would prove satisfactory. At all events, the hon. Member, who was perfectly justified in calling attention to the subject, would see that the Government were far from neglecting it, but that they had been giving it their constant and urgent attention. The hon. Member might not agree with the steps taken; but the Government had endeavoured to deal with what had been justly described as an extremely difficult and delicate matter, so as at once to give substantial help, and not to create a bad precedent. It was a Scottish Board, and not the Board in London, which determined the size of the schools, which he must say, from all he had heard, were ridiculously too large. There had been a monstrous extravagance in the erection of magnificent school buildings to contain twice the number of children ever likely to occupy them. It was a Board of Scotland which fixed the numbers, and their proposals had repeatedly been cut down by the Education Board in London. It was only fair to state that when an attack had been made on the Education Board in London.

MR. CALDWELL asked whether it was not the fact that the London Board had supreme control over the Scottish Board?

MR. GOSCHEN: Yes; but what would the hon. Member have said if the Saxon element had overruled the Scottish Board who cried for the education of their children? If the Scottish Board had asked for accommodation for 400 children in a particular parish, and then the Saxon element in London had said no, 200 would suffice, it would have formed the greatest Scottish grievance ever submitted to Parliament.

MR. NOLAN (Louth, N.) pointed out that the right hon. Gentleman had made no answer to the several specific instances of the brutal and cowardly outrages perpetrated by the police on women and children in Ireland which had been brought before his notice.

MR. GOSCHEN said, it would be impossible for him to deal specifically with those cases, as he had not the requisite information on the subject.

MR. SEXTON asked, if the Government meant to continue the services of Captain Seagrave as a magistrate pending the inquiry promised?

MR. GOSCHEN was understood to say that their present information would not warrant them in suspending Captain Seagrave.

MR. J. O'CONNOR: Sir, I understand that my absence from the House just now was made the subject of animadversion by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and I wish to explain that I was simply called out by a visitor. I wish, as indignantly as I possibly can, to repudiate the insinuation of the right hon. Gentleman that my speech was intended to incite to outrage in Ireland. I have done more to put down crime and outrage in Ireland than the Chancellor of the Exchequer and all his Colleagues put together.

MR. SEXTON: What answer does the Chancellor of the Exchequer make as to continuing Captain Seagrave in his employment?

MR. GOSCHEN said, that question rested with the Department of the Chief Secretary. At present all he knew was that the accusations against Captain Seagrave were contained in a letter sent to the hon. Member for Mid Cork, the writer of which they did not know. That was not information on which they could suspend a magistrate.

Question put, and agreed to.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT—HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

The PARLIAMENT was this day prorogued by Commission.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (Lord HALSBURY) acquainted the House that Her Majesty had been pleased to grant two several Commissions; one for declaring Her Royal Assent to several Bills agreed to by both Houses of Parliament, and the other for proroguing the Parliament: — And the LORDS COMMISSIONERS — namely, The LORD CHANCELLOR; The EARL of COVENTRY (Master of the Buckhounds); The EARL of KINTORE (Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard); The LORD COLVILLE; and The LORD ESHER (Master of the Rolls) —being in their Robes, and seated on a Form between the Throne and the Woolsack; and the COMMONS being come, with their Speaker, and the Commission for that purpose being read, the ROYAL ASSENT was given to several Bills.

Then THE LORD CHANCELLOR, pursuant to Her Majesty's Command, delivered HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH as follows:—

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"I have great satisfaction in being able to release you from your protracted labours.

"My relations with all Foreign Powers continue to be friendly.

"I regret that the Convention which was concluded between Myself and the President of the United States for the adjustment of the questions which had arisen in reference to the Fisheries in North American Waters has not commended itself to the judgment of the Senate of the United States, in whom, according to the Constitution of that Country, the power of ratification is vested. The temporary arrangements, however, which have been adopted will, I trust, prevent any immediate inconvenience arising from this decision.

"The Conference which has been held on the subject of Bounties upon the exportation of Sugar has been brought to a satisfactory issue by the conclusion of a Convention for their abolition, which has been signed by the Representatives of most of the sugar-producing Countries.

"The restoration of Egypt to a condition of Political and Financial Security has been for the time interrupted by an attempt on the part of the Soudanese to possess themselves of the Port of Suakin. The dispersion of the besieging forces has been effected by a brilliant Military operation on the part of the Egyptian Troops, supported by a British Contingent. In other respects, the administrative and economical progress of Egypt has been satisfactory.

"An insurrection has broken out upon the Continental portion of the Dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, which has brought with it considerable destruction of life and property in the German Settlements on that Coast. It is evident that the renewed vigour of the Slave Trade, of which symptoms have unhappily shown themselves in several parts of Africa, has largely contributed to the production of these disturbances. I have joined with the Emperor of Germany in establishing a Naval blockade of that part of the Coast which is in insurrection, in order to prevent not only the exportation of slaves, but also the importation of munitions of war.

"My Indian Dominions have enjoyed general tranquillity and prosperity during the past year. Disturbances, however, have occurred in the neighbouring region of the Black Mountain, and on the extreme frontier of Sikkim; but they have been terminated without difficulty. A rebellion which broke out in Afghanistan under Ishak Khan, and which at one time threatened to assume formidable proportions, has been entirely subdued by the Military Forces of the Ameer.

"A rising on the part of some Zulu Chiefs, which does not seem to have met with any sympathy on the part of the population, has been suppressed by My Troops and the Native Levies; and the Chiefs concerned in it are awaiting their trial before a Special Commission.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the service of the State. I trust that the financial measures which you have sanctioned will materially increase the public resources of the Country, without adding to its fiscal burdens.

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"The measures which you have passed for extending the functions and improving the machinery of Local Government in England are calculated to increase the loyal attachment of My people to their institutions. I trust that you may be able now to promote the successful working of these changes in your several localities; and that in this and all other fields of duty the blessing of Almighty God may be with you.

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Thursday the Thirty-first day of January next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday the Thirty-first day of January next.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 24th December, 1888.

The House met at a quarter before Twelve of the clock.

PROROGATION OF THE PARLIAMENT.

Message to attend The LORDS COMMISSIONERS:—

The House went:—and a Royal Commission to that purpose having been read the Royal Assent was given to several Bills.

And afterwards Her Majesty's Most Gracious Speech was delivered to both Houses of Parliament by the Lord High Chancellor (pursuant to Her Majesty's Command).

Then a Commission for proroguing the Parliament was read.

After which,

THE LORD CHANCELLOR said—

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

By virtue of Her Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in Her Majesty's Name, and in obedience to Her Commands, prorogue this Parliament to Thursday the Thirty-first day of January next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday the Thirty-first day of January next.

GENERAL INDEX TO SESSION 1888.

EXPLANATION OF THE ABBREVIATIONS.

It being a principal object of this Index, that the proceedings on each Motion shall be completely recorded, some abbreviations of forms were necessary. Those who are accustomed to the proceedings of Parliament will readily fill up the voids. Those who are not so familiar, may find the following explanation useful, but will find the whole formulæ set out at length in the "Contents."

The names which immediately follow the title of a Bill are those of the Peers or hon. Members who have charge of the Bill.

The numbers which are added at stages of Bills are the official numbers of the prints and reprints ordered at each stage, and, with the Statute, will enable the reader to follow all the changes the Bill has undergone.

The entries—Moved, "That the Bill be now read 2ª;" Amendt. "this day six months;" Question put, "That 'now,' &c."—indicate the usual form of raising the issue—namely, "That the word 'now' stand part of the Question."

"The Ballot, Amendt. on Committee of Supply" indicates that the Question was raised by means of an Amendment moved on the Motion (after the Order of the Day for the House to go into Committee of Supply had been read), "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair." In this case the issue is formally raised by the Motion "To leave out from the word 'That' to the end of the Question, in order to add" other words the decision is taken on the Question, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question."

The Nos. added to the "Parliamentary Papers" are in most cases those given in the Commons' "List of Papers for Sale."

INDEX

HANSARD'S PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES,

Education—Technical Education

Amendt. on Committee of Supply April 27, to leave out from "That," add "in the interests of technical, commercial, and agricultural instruction, as well as of general education, it is indispensable that the attention of the Government should be no longer limited to primary education and science and art teaching, but should be extended to the secondary education of the Country, which remains without organization or public supervision under a responsible Minister of Education, notwithstanding the repeated recommendations of Royal Commissions and Select Committees of this House on the subject" (Mr. Arthur Acland) v., [325] 813; Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" after debate, it being One of the clock, Mr. Speaker adjourned the House, without Question put

Question, Mr. Bartley; Answer, The First Lord of the Treasury (Mr. W. H. Smith) April 30, 908

Education—Voluntary Schools—Parliamentary Grants

Moved, "That the principle of the Parliamentary Grant in aid of Voluntary Schools is unjust, and that the Grant should be allocated rather in proportion to the poverty of School Districts than their wealth" (Mr. Kerans) May 8, [325] 1725; Motion withdrawn

India—East India (Revenue Accounts)

Ordered, That the several Accounts and Papers which have been presented to the House, in this Session of Parliament, relating to the Revenues of India, be referred to the consideration of a Committee of the whole House Aug 6

Resolved, That this House will, on Thursday, resolve itself into the said Committee

India—East India Revenue Accounts—The Annual Financial Statement

Moved, "That it appears, by the Accounts laid before this House, that the Total Revenue of India for the year ending the 31st day of March 1887 was Rx.77,337,134; that the Total Expenditure in India and in England charged to Revenue was Rx.77,158,707; that there was a surplus of Revenue over Expenditure of Rx.178,427; and that the Capital Outlay on Railways and Irrigation Works was Rx.5,670,484, besides a Capital Charge of £4,914,546 involved in the Redemption of Liabilities" (Sir John Gorst) Aug 9, [330] 137

After long debate, Amendt. at end, add "But this Committee is of opinion that the economies proposed by the Army Commission in India should be enforced, especially those which would do away with the Commands in Chief in Madras and Bombay; and that the Civil administration of those Presidencies might be more economically conducted, but with equal if not greater efficiency, by making those Presidencies Lieutenant Governorships instead of Governorships" (Sir William Plowden); Question proposed, "That those words be there added;" after further debate, Question put; A. 36, N. 105; M. 69 (D. PARLIAMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (RULES OF PROCEDURE)—NEW STANDING ORDERS RELATIVE TO PUBLIC BUSINESS—I. SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

Moved, "That, unless the House otherwise order, the House shall meet every Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, at Three of the clock, and shall, unless previously adjourned, sit till One of the clock a.m., when the Speaker shall adjourn the House without Question put, unless a Bill originating in Committee of Ways and Means, or unless proceedings made in pursuance of any Act of Parliament or Standing Order, be then under consideration:

That at Eight of the clock the Speaker or Chairman, as the case may be, shall suspend the sitting by leaving the Chair until Nine of the clock. If, after the resumption of business, at Nine of the clock, and before a quarter past Nine, notice be taken that 40 Members are not present, the Speaker or Chairman shall, unless 40 Members are sooner present, suspend the sitting until a quarter past Nine, when he shall count the House or Committee:

That at half an hour after midnight on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, except as aforesaid, and at half-past Five of the clock on Wednesdays, the proceedings on any business then under consideration shall be interrupted: and, if the House be in Committee, the Chairman shall leave the Chair, and make his report to the House; and if a Motion has been proposed for the Adjournment of the House, or of the Debate, or in Committee, That the Chairman do report Progress, or do leave the Chair, every such dilatory Motion shall lapse without Question put; and the business then under consideration, and any business subsequently appointed, shall be appointed for the next day on which the House shall sit, unless the Speaker ascertains by the preponderance of voices that a Majority of the House desires that such business should be deferred until a later day:

Provided always, That on the interruption of business the Closure may be moved, and if

Public Offices, Re-organizations in
Moved, "That the Re-organizations in the Accountant General's and Secretary's Departments of the Admiralty have been injurious to the public interests, by resulting in increased charges for those Departments, and by needlessly adding to extravagant pensions and bonuses ; and that in any further re-organizations, officials who are still able and willing to render service for the public money shall be provided with employment in other Departments, instead of being forced to become useless burdens upon the country" (Mr. Jennings) June 12, [326] 1893
After debate, Amendt. to leave out from "That" add "this House, whilst of opinion that when the re-organization of a Department becomes necessary, full inquiry should be made into the wants of other Departments with a view to the continued public employment of redundant officers, is not prepared, pending the inquiry of the Royal Commission upon Civil Service Establishments, to anticipate its report by laying down

SPEAKER, THE (Right Hon. ARTHUR WELLESLEY PEEL), Warwick and Leamington
NEW RULES OF PROCEDURE (1888)—
Business of the House—New Standing Orders relative to Public Business, Session 1888
Resolution I.—Sittings of the House, [322] 1403, 1435, 1447. Nomination of Five Members to act as Deputy Speakers, 1458
Resolution II.—Closure of Debate, 1659, 1660, 1671
Resolution III.—Disorderly Conduct, 1690, 1695
Resolution IX.—Divisions, 1724, 1754, 1759
Resolution X.—Address in Answer to the Queen's Speech, 1774

Rule I. (Sittings of the House)
Mr. Speaker: It would not be relevant to go into a general discussion of the Rules on the Motion to give precedence to their consideration, [322] 1252

The Twelve o'Clock Rule—Mr. Speaker: As I read the Resolution passed by this House on Friday last, its purport appears to be this—that after 12 o'clock it is sufficient to retard the further progress of any Bill for any hon. Member to say "I object." . . . . The Half-past Twelve Rule, if it has not been abolished, has certainly fallen into desuetude by the operation of that Resolution, [322] 1497
Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Member withdraw his Motion? Mr. Brooke Robinson: I do, Sir. Mr. Cremer: I object.—Mr. Speaker: The matter then stands over till to-morrow. Mr. Sexton: Is it possible for an hon. Member to object after a Motion has been made and debated?—Mr. Speaker: The objection, if taken at any time, is fatal, [331] 1391

II. (Closure of Debate)
Crofters' Holdings (Scotland), &c., Bill—Dr. Cameron claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."—Mr. Speaker withheld his assent. He said the debate had not been conducted for such a length of time that it was desirable to take the opinion of the House while still an interval of time was left for discussion, [324] 1600
Lord Charles Beresford claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."—Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the noble Lord that there are still 10 minutes during which the debate may be continued; and also that there is the right of reply on the part of the Mover of the Motion before the House, [325] 1171
Official Secrets Bill—Mr. Kelly claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."—Mr. Speaker said: Five minutes is a very short time to devote to a Second Reading discussion, and, moreover, Business is now interrupted by 12 o'clock, [326] 1496

Rule as to the Closure in Committee—Mr. Conybeare said, he had a right to repudiate the charge of obstruction made against him. He challenged anyone to say whether he had in any single instance done anything that by any interpretation could be called obstruction.—Mr. Speaker: This discussion is somewhat irregular. It refers to circumstances that took place in Committee, and to the application of the Rule of Closure there, of which the House is not cognizant, [331] 730
Mr. Conybeare was proceeding to refer to the exercise of the closure in connection with the passage of an Irish Vote when Mr. Speaker ruled the hon. Member out of Order in referring to those proceedings, [331] 732
Mr. Labouchere wished to ask whether the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. W. H. Smith) was correctly reported in the debate on the 24th of February of the present year, when the Standing Order, Sittings of the House, was under discussion. . . . . Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is now debating the question for the purpose of elucidating some answer given by the right hon. Gentleman with regard to Report of

Supply, and to that extent I told him he would be in Order; but he would not be in Order in raising a debate as to what the right hon. Gentleman had said about the Rule at the proceedings in Committee of Supply if under discussion at 12 o'clock, [331] 612, 613

Educational Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882—Motion for an Address—Mr. Conway rose to move the Adjournment of the Debate—Mr. Speaker; I shall not put that Question, for I consider it would be an abuse of the Rules of the House. I will state the reason why I think so. The hon. Member who moved the Resolution is acting in accordance with the procedure laid down in an Act of Parliament. The limit of the time within which he could so act is getting very near, and it would be a very unfair thing, by means of moving the Adjournment, to deprive the hon. Member of the only means of raising the question, [328] 1887

The Twelve o'Clock Rule

Army (Annual) Bill—Order for Second Reading read.—Mr. Biggar objected [it being now past 12 of the clock.]—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman's objection does not hold good to a Bill of this nature, which is in pursuance of the provisions of a Statute, [323] 1750

I must remind the hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. T. M. Healy) that the debate has gone on till midnight, and therefore stands, ipso facto, adjourned. . . . The debate is adjourned by the Rules of the House, and remarks as to that Motion would anticipate the discussion on the subject which might arise when the debate is resumed, [326] 1234

Mr. T. M. Healy asked if, under the Resolution the House had that day passed, the suspension of the Rule closing debate at Midnight only applied to the debate just concluded, and then, seeing that 1 o'clock was passed, should not the Speaker, under the One o'clock Rule, at once vacate the Chair without Motion put, the remaining Orders of the Day standing over until the next day's Sitting?—Mr. Speaker said, the House had passed a Resolution providing that the debate on a particular Motion should not be interrupted at 12 o'clock, and at the termination of the proceedings for which such provision was made the operation of the usual Rule, till then suspended, began, [327] 1418

National Debt (Notice of Redemption) Resolution—Dr. Tanner asked whether he would be in Order in objecting to this Resolution being proceeded with after 12 o'clock?—Mr. Speaker said that the objection would not apply, inasmuch as the proceeding was taken in pursuance of a Statute, and was exempted from the 12 o'clock Rule, [328] 525

Mr. Macdonald asked whether it was competent to discuss the Bills after 12 o'clock, in face of the Notices of opposition to them already on the Paper?—Mr. Speaker: Notice of opposition has nothing to do with the matter; but if any hon. Member objects when the Bills are called on, that would sufficient to delay them, [328] 1534, 1644

[cont.

Mr. Whitbread asked, whether, supposing a Member who had charge of a Bill were allowed to make his statement after 12 o'clock, would that place Members who desired to oppose the measure in any worse position, or have less power of stopping Business after allowing this courtesy to a Member in charge of a Bill?—Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Member was perfectly right in his suggestion; an hon. Member would not, under such circumstances, lose his power of objecting, [329] 890

Parliamentary Elections (Returning Officers' Expenses) (Scotland) Bill—Moved, "That the Bill be now read a second time."—Mr. Esslemont thought the House should know the intention of the Government in regard to this Bill.—Mr. Speaker: Objection having been taken, the hon. Member cannot debate the Bill now, [330] 1499 mployers' Liability for Injuries to Workmen Bill—Consideration. Mr. W. H. Smith claimed, "That the Main Question be now put."—Mr. T. M. Healy: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of Order. The House has decided that this Bill be now considered. I presume, therefore, that it will not be competent for the Government to postpone the Bill to a future date?—Mr. Speaker: The Question is, "That the Bill be now considered."—Mr. T. M. Healy: My point is that, as it is after 12 o'clock, it is impossible to consider the Bill now.—Mr. Speaker: There is nothing in the objection. The proceeding is quite proper, [331] 1483

Mr. E. Robertson. I wish, Sir, to put a Question to you upon a point of Order in reference to a Motion which is about to be made by the First Lord of the Treasury—namely, whether a general Motion to suspend the 12 o'clock Rule would not, by the Rules of the House, be open to debate; and whether a Motion repeated every Monday and Thursday to the end of the Session to suspend the Rule in pursuance of an avowed purpose is not a practical evasion of the Rules of the House?—Mr. Speaker: I would remind the hon. and learned Member that the words of the Standing Order are—"The Motion may be made by the Minister of the Crown at the commencement of Public Business, to be decided without Amendment or Debate." There is no prohibition against the Motion being repeated, [331] 1614-5

The Six o'Clock Rule

Supply—Report—Mr. Conybeare said, he objected to the Report of Supply being taken.—Mr. Speaker: The objection does not hold good for the Report of Supply. . . . The Standing Order of July 10 expressly provides that the Report of Supply might be taken after 6 o'clock on Wednesday, [330] 1217-8-9

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Standing Orders—Committee of Ways and Means—The hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. T. M. Healy) seems to think this is an exceptional proceeding. The Standing Orders require that the Committee of Ways and Means should be set up immediately after the Address is voted. This is merely a formal proceeding, and I am acting under the obligations of the Standing Orders, [322] 1348, 1349

Suspension of the Standing Order as regards certain Bills, [323] 1848

Sir Wilfrid Lawson asked with reference to a certain Notice whether, as it refers to the conduct of hon. Members of this House, it does not come within the category of a question of Privilege?—Mr. Speaker: Certainly not. It is put down in the usual way as a Notice of Motion, and it will come on when called on. Of course, if the discussion takes place after 12 o'clock, the time for adjournment would be 1 o'clock, [328] 1413

Suspension of the Standing Orders—Mr. Speaker: The Rule which applies to the Suspension of the Standing Orders has reference to the Business which stands on the Paper at Twelve o'clock, and not to an ordinary Wednesday Sitting, [330] 118

Orders of the Day—Government Orders—Mr. W. H. Smith said, he would move the Adjournment after the 24 Government Orders had been disposed of, and the 43rd Order—namely, the Marriages Validation Bill, which, though not marked as such, was in reality a Government Bill.—Mr. Speaker said, as it appeared to have been a slip not to have put the Marriages Validation Bill down as a Government Order, it might be now set down as such after Order 24, [330] 121

Sittings and Adjournment of the House

Morning and Evening Sittings—Orders of the Day—Suspension and Resumption of Sittings—Mr. Speaker said, the course followed was perfectly regular, [323] 1538

Saturday Sittings

Report of Supply—Dr. Clark asked whether it would be competent to take Report of Supply after half-past 5 (Saturday)?—Mr. Speaker said, that would be so according to Standing Orders, [331] 731

Supply — Committee — Hour of Meeting—Mr. T. M. Healy: I should like to receive your interpretation of the Rule "Sittings of the House" passed on the 24th of February. My submission is that the Government cannot fix a 12 o'clock Sitting on Saturday except by a special Order of the House. The Government have thought fit to apply the Wednesday Rule to Saturdays; but I want to know, Sir, under what Rule you will take the Chair at 12 o'clock to-morrow?—Mr. Speaker: The hon. and learned Member is quite right in his interpretation of the Rule. Saturday being an exceptional day, on which the House does not usually sit, it would be proper that a distinct opportunity should be offered for the House to express an opinion on the point. As a matter of Order, I could not say that the mere fact of a Minute saying

"to-morrow (being Saturday), at twelve" would preclude any hon. Gentleman objecting, and so preventing a Sitting being taken on Saturday, [331] 1484, 1486

Mr. Hunter said, he would move that the Wednesday Rule should apply to the Saturday Sitting.—Mr. Speaker said, it was not competent for the hon. Member to make that Motion, [332] 293

NEW RULES OF PROCEDURE, 1882

Rule 2 (Adjournment of the House)

Matter—Meeting, April 12, at Ennis—Mr. Parnell having asked leave to move the Adjournment of the House, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, Mr. Speaker said, he did not think the Motion would come within the Rule as to a definite matter of urgent public importance unless the hon. Member struck out the reference to "other proceedings," [324] 1068, 1079, 1101, 1104

Mr. Justin M'Carthy—Matter, Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887—Increased Sentences on Appeal, [325] 843

May 1—Dr. Clark—Matter, Crofters' Grievances, [325] 1048

June 12—Mr. Thomas Ellis—Matter, Tithe Disturbances in North Wales—Action of Police and Emergency Men, [326] 1415

By the Rules of the House, the discussion must be kept closely to the definite point which has been raised, [326] 1428

The right hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. Osborne Morgan) is not in Order in referring to the position of the Church in Wales on the question of tithe. The Question before the House relates to the conduct of the police towards men, women, and children in a certain place in Denbighshire on a particular day, [326] 1431

July 6—Mr. Bradlaugh—Matter, Police Courts—Enforcement of certain orders made on the 17th December by Mr. Bridge, Metropolitan Police Magistrate, [328] 582

Mr. Parnell; I beg leave to move the Adjournment of the House on a definite question of urgent public importance — namely, the statement that we have just heard from the right hon. Gentleman, and the position which he has assigned to this most important Motion. Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but that would be a violation of the Rules of the House. It would be anticipating the discussion of a Bill standing on the Notice Paper, [328] 1411

July 16—Mr. Conybeare—Matter, Conduct of Metropolitan Police in Trafalgar Square—Mr. Speaker reminded the hon. Member (Mr. Conybeare) that he must confine himself to the specific cases in which the Adjournment of the House had been moved, and not go into general questions which were irrelevant to the subject of the Motion, [328] 1417, 1418

November 29—Mr. Bradlaugh—Matter, Imprisonment of Thomas Moroney, [331] 529

December 4—Lord Randolph Churchill—Matter, Despatch of a British Battalion to Suakin, [331] 1024

SPEAKER, The—cont.

December 6—Mr. Labouchere—Matter, The Unsatisfactory Position of Public Business—The hon. Member was proceeding to review the work of the Session—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman has moved the Adjournment for the sake of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance. I do not think that under leave so given it is competent to the hon. Gentleman to take a general retrospect of the Session, [331] 1264

DIVISIONS

Local Government (England and Wales) Bill — Estimate of Values of Public-House Property—Sir Wilfrid Lawson: Rule 196 declares that no Member of this House shall be entitled to vote on any Question in which he has a direct pecuniary interest, and that the vote of any Member so interested shall be disallowed. May I ask whether those interested in breweries will be allowed to vote in this matter?—Mr. Speaker: That is a point which is settled by the judgment of the House, [326] 1537, 1538

PETITIONS

The Proceedings of this House—Mr. Sexton asked whether he would be in Order in moving that the text of the Petition be embodied in the Proceedings of the House?—Mr. Speaker: That would not be a usual or proper course to take. It may be printed by order of the Committee before whom it will go.—Mr. Sexton: Is any Motion necessary to insure that it will be printed?—Mr. Speaker: I have no doubt it will be printed, [329] 729

PRIVILEGE

Wrongful Arrest of Mr. Patrick O'Brien—I understood from the hon. Member (Mr. Picton) privately that the main purport of his Motion was to allude to the arrest of a certain Member of this House without justification. If the hon. Member proposes to refer to the arrest of the hon. Member for West Waterford (Mr. Pyne) and the hon. Member for West Cork (Mr. Gilhooly), he would not, in my opinion, be within Privilege. Privilege cannot be pleaded to an arrest on a criminal charge, nor to the administration of criminal justice. But with regard to the case of the hon. Member for North Monaghan (Mr. P. O'Brien) there is a clear case for demanding explanation, and in that matter the hon. Member is perfectly within his right in calling it a matter of Privilege, and so taking precedence, [322] 262, 263, 266

Comments on the Votes of certain Members—Letter of the National Union Association respecting the votes of certain Members. The letter having been read, Mr. Speaker said: It seems to me that there is not even a primâ facie case of Privilege, [323] 1312

Canvassing of Members—Circulars and post cards soliciting the vote of hon. Members in regard to the alleged grievances of certain workmen at Enfield and Woolwich Arsenal being complained, Mr. Speaker said: I must say, taking together the circular and post-card, the proceeding appears to be contrary to the best usages and traditions of this House; and if the practice were to become prevalent, I am afraid it would tend to lower the character of the House, [323] 1439

Arrest of Members—Mr. Speaker: I have always acted on the principle that the arrest of a Member is a most important matter, and ought not to be kept back from the House; and I therefore took the earliest opportunity of making the communication of the fact (arrest of Mr. J. J. O'Kelly) to the House, [327] 495, 498

Lord Randolph Churchill, proposing, as a Question of Privilege, a letter written by Mr. Conybeare and published in The Star newspaper, asked, as a point of Order, whether it would be in Order to move that the Clerk at the Table should read the letter, or whether it would be more in Order that he should read it himself?—Mr. Speaker said, that if the noble Lord wished to bring the matter before the House as a matter of Breach of Privilege, it would be right that the letter should be read by the Clerk at the Table, [329] 49

Relevancy—Which having been done, and debate arising, Mr. Speaker said: The noble Lord is bound to confine himself to the subject-matter of the letter, [329] 51

Rules of Debate—The usual course is for the hon. Member who is charged to make any statement he wishes to make, and then to withdraw, [329] 56

Mr. Speaker states at length the circumstances under which the debate had arisen and its present position [See Text [329] p. 57]. I propose to regard this proposition as two distinct propositions, and to put to the House—first, that the letter in The Star is a distinct libel on the Speaker of the House of Commons, and deserves the severest condemnation of this House, [329] 65, 67

The Times newspaper—Mr. Speaker: The Question before the House is whether the words in the issue of The Times of this day constitute a Breach of Privilege. The hon. Member is not entitled to go back to former articles, because the question simply is whether the words contained in the article to-day constitute a Breach of the Privileges of this House, [329] 1258, 1259, 1263

Service of a Summons upon a Member of this House in the Outer Lobby, and it being proposed to appoint a Select Committee thereon—Mr. Speaker said: I hope I may interfere in the interests of the House, and with the fullest desire to preserve the privileges of Members of the House. I trust that the House will not in any way prejudge this case, but will allow the proposed Committee to inquire most fully into the circumstances, and do what, in their wisdom, they may think fit to guard the privileges of every Member of this House. The Question immediately before the House is the appointment of a Select Committee, and the terms of the Reference to that Committee, [331] 217

Attachment of a Member (Mr. Gent-Davis)—Mr. Speaker acquainted the House that he had received a Letter relating to the Attachment of Mr. Gent-Davis, Member for Kennington. Mr. Sexton: May I ask whether that notification vacates the seat, or what effect it has on the seat?—Mr. Speaker: That is a question which it is not for me to answer. I have only done my duty in communicating to the House the Letter of the learned Judge, [331] 484

Order

Suspension of Members—It is a question rather for the interpretation of the House than a question of Order. If the House limits the suspension to one month, that Proviso could be added to the end, [329] 99, 100

PUBLIC BILLS

The decision of the House negativing the Motion, "That the Bill be now read a second time," determines only that the Bill be not now read the second time; and it is, therefore, competent for the hon. Gentleman to set up the Bill again and put it down for Second Reading on a future day, [322] 1496

Amendments—The hon. Member is discussing clauses in respect of which the House has already divided. The hon. Gentleman is, therefore, not in Order in referring to those clauses, [325] 1561

Amendments — Criminal Evidence Bill — Mr. Speaker said, he must point out to the hon. and learned Member that Notice of such Amendment would be necessary. He had intimated to the hon. and learned Gentleman that the Notice on the Paper was not in Order, the reason being that the subject of the Notice was not germane to the Law of Evidence which was dealt with by the Bill, [325] 1564

Parliamentary Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland Bill—Moved, "That the Committee be deferred till To-morrow." Question put. Mr. T. M. Healy: I must object to that, and we can take a Division—Mr. Speaker: The majority of the House may decide if the Bill should be set down for this or a future day. Question again put.—Mr. Speaker: There is not a preponderance of voices for the later day, and there can be no Division on the subject [326] 1145

Local Government (England and Wales) Bill—Several hon. Gentlemen having put on the Paper Instructions to the Committee on this Bill, Mr. Speaker thought it his duty to refer to them severally; and, having pointed out the objections attaching to each, called upon the hon. Member for the Eye Division of Suffolk (Mr. F. S. Stevenson), whose Instruction was in Order, [326] 1440

Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill—Instruction to the Committee.—An Amendment authorizing marriage with a deceased husband's brother can only be attained by an Instruction to the Committee. Afterwards Mr. Heneage claimed to move, "That the Question be now put."—Mr. Speaker:

As no arguments have been adduced on either side, I cannot consent to put the Motion of the right hon. Gentleman, [327] 75

National Debt (Supplemental) Bill—Bill, as amended, considered. I must call the attention of the right hon. Gentleman to the fact that there is no Question before the House. No debate can arise at this stage, and the Third Reading will be taken to-morrow. There can be no discussion on this stage of the Bill, [327] 126

Libel Law Amendment Bill—Amendments on Consideration.—The more regular course would be for the hon. Gentleman to move the clause in the terms in which it appeared on the Paper, and then, if it was the pleasure of the House to read it a second time, for the hon. Gentleman to propose whatever Amendments he might wish to make in it, [327] 734, 740

Mr. Speaker's judgment as to further Amendments, 743, 752

Moved, "That the Order for the Second Reading of the Lunacy Acts Amendment Bill be discharged and the Bill withdrawn." Mr. Conybeare asked if there was any chance of the Bill being taken in an Autumn Session?—Mr. Speaker: If it is withdrawn, it cannot be taken in the Autumn, [328] 1211

Bribery (Public Bodies Prevention) Bill—Moved, That the Order for the Second be discharged and the Bill withdrawn. Mr. Conybeare: I object.—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member cannot object to that Motion, [328] 1883

When an hon. Member proposes to withdraw a Bill it is a purely formal Motion, to which I do not think the objection of the hon. Member would hold good, [329] 48; [330] 1371

Third Reading (after Report).—The Third Reading may be taken without the unanimous, if there is the general, consent of the House, [329] 1855

Land Purchase (Ireland) Bill—Motion for Leave—Mr. Gladstone asked Mr. Speaker to state the nature of the Rule under which it had been found possible to dispense with the preliminary Resolution in Committee in the case of this Bill.—Mr. Speaker accordingly explained the character and position of the Bill, and, in concluding, said: It has always been the practice of this House, sanctioned by my Predecessors in the Chair, to hold that it is not necessary for the House to go into Committee and to pass a preliminary Resolution in regard to a Bill which is in accordance with the provisions of an Act already passed, and where that Act has been passed under the ordinary sanction provided by the Standing Order in the case of Money Bills (see text), [330] 1550, 1551

Sir Wilfrid Lawson: Is it in Order, Sir, to get a Bill printed before the First Reading?—Mr. Speaker: There is no breach of Order, [330] 1761

Order for Committee read—Instructions—Mr. Parnell: I propose, Sir, to move the Instruction to the Committee which stands in my name.—Mr. Speaker explained at length. It was, he said, irregular, because it opened up the whole question of the Land Act of 1881, without any special reference to either Lord Ashbourne's Act, or to the Land Purchase Bill now before the House (see text), [331] 32, 33, 34

[cont.

Rules of Debate—Irrelevance—Mr. W. H. Smith asked, whether the hon. and learned Member was speaking to the question of arrears or of purchase?—Mr. Waddy said, that if he was not in Order he would, no doubt, be called to Order by the proper authority.—Mr. Speaker said, that to go into the general question of arrears and their bearings on the ultimate position of tenants who might hereafter desire to purchase was opening a wider field of discussion than it was competent for him now to enter upon, [331] 36

Consideration — Mr. Sexton asked whether the clause he had put down reserving minerals, mining rights, and foreshores and vesting them in the Commissioners of Works in the case of holdings under the Act would be accepted by the Government?—Mr. Speaker said, it would require an Instruction.—Mr Sexton said, he had given Notice of an Instruction.—Mr. Speaker said, it would be beyond the scope of the Bill to allow such an Instruction; and, therefore, it was entirely out of Order, [331] 471

Reprint after Amendments—Mr. Henry H. Fowler asked the Speaker on whom the authority rested to decide whether a Bill which had been altered on the Report stage should be reprinted?—Mr. Speaker: The House itself would decide when a Bill should be reprinted, [331] 527

Order—Stages of Public Bills—Mr. Sexton asked whether it was in Order to discuss when the Third Reading should be taken, as the Report stage had not yet been reached?—Mr. Speaker said, that such a course would be irregular, [331] 458

Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill—Second Reading — Amendments — Mr. Speaker: In the event of the Amendment of the hon. Member for Northampton becoming the substantive Question, it will, of course, be competent for any Member to move to amend it, [332] 332

Amendments—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman (Mr. J. G. Talbot) proposes to leave out the whole of the words, and to substitute an entirely different Resolution. I am afraid I cannot put the hon. Gentleman's Amendment, [332] 336

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill—Third Reading—Committee of the Whole House—Rulings of the Chairman—Money Bills—Mr. Caldwell asked whether it would be competent for the House to review the ruling of the Chairman when the House was in Committee yesterday, in consequence of which an essential part of the Bill had not passed through the Committee stage?—Mr. Speaker: There is no such thing as an appeal from the Chairman of Committees to the Speaker; but, as a matter of courtesy to the hon. Member, I may say that the proper course was followed. The practice is that in Money Bills and Bills of this nature the Preamble is never put, [332] 1010, 1011

RULES AND ORDER OF DEBATE

The Previous Question—Mr. Speaker points out the inconvenience attaching to the customary form of moving, "That the Question be now put," and proposes to establish the precedent by adopting the form, "That the Question be not now put;" and the general assent of the House being signified, Mr. Speaker proposed the Question, "That the Question be not now put," [323] 1861

The Judges—I am quite aware that Judge Curran is not a Judge of a Superior Court; but I think that all those who are in the position of Judges ought to be spoken of with common decency and respect. If the hon. Gentleman has any charge to bring against this Judge, of course he can take the course prescribed by law, no matter what his position may be, [322] 463

Mr. Speaker: Again I say this is not a point of Order. If the hon. and gallant Baronet had made any charge against the hon. Gentleman in the House in un-Parliamentary language, I should certainly have called him to Order. If the hon. Gentleman thinks any imputation has been made against him, he is at perfect liberty to repudiate the insinuation so made, and to state that there is no foundation for it. No Question of Order has yet arisen, [322] 528, 529, 530

Order in Debate—I think the hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. T. M. Healy) is now disputing the ruling of the Chair, and he is out of Order in doing so, [322] 850

There being an Amendment before the House, it would not be competent for an hon. Member to move the omission of words in the Original Motion, [322] 1690; an Amendment allowed, 1695, 1754

The hon. Member could not properly, under the circumstances, take that course (of moving the adjournment of the debate); but if he spoke till the hour of adjournment, he would be entitled to resume on the next occasion, [322] 1984

Repetition—Mr. Speaker said, it did not strike him that the hon. Member (Mr. Dixon-Hartland) was repeating himself. He was entitled to amplify the argument upon which he was engaged when Business was suspended, [323] 1540

It is a well-established Rule of the House that a Member may refer to notes in order to refresh his memory; but he must not read his speech, [323] 1632

Right of Reply—The hon. and gallant Member has no right of reply on an Order of the Day, [324] 1560

Reference to a Previous Answer — Mr. Speaker: It is impossible now, at this stage, to enter into a debate as to whether an answer given now is a different one to an answer given some time ago, [326] 1399, 1400

Production of Documents—Mr. T. M. Healy inquired whether it was not in accordance with the Rules of the House that when a Member of the Treasury Bench rose to reply to a Question with reference to a Report, and makes a reference to that Report, he was not bound to lay the Report upon the Table?—Mr. Speaker: There is no obligation of that nature as regards a confidential Report; but as to official or ordinary Reports, if a Minister quotes from them, he is bound to lay them on the Table, [326] 1402

Production of Documents—Mr. Sexton: I wish to ask you, Sir, whether the judgment in the Killeagh case was directly quoted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Solicitor General and other Members of the Government in the course of the debate last night; and whether, if that be so, they are not bound, for the information of the House, to lay a copy upon the Table?—Mr. Speaker; That does not come under the Rule; but I suppose that the judgment will be accessible to hon. Members. Of course, if it were not, and if it were only an official document, and they have quoted from it, they would be bound to lay a copy upon the Table, [327] 1283

Order, order! In the interests of the fair conduct of the debate, I trust that these constant running commentaries on the remarks of the right hon. Gentleman (Mr. A. J. Balfour) will cease, otherwise it will be impossible that the debate can proceed, [327] 1373

Amendments — Mr. Speaker explains, at length, his reasons for permitting Mr. Stansfeld to move his Resolution relating to Amendts. on the Ulster Canal and Tyrone Navigation Bill. The right hon. Gentleman, he said, in proposing this Motion, had taken an unusual course, and the circumstances in which the House finds itself are most unusual. I consider that the Motion of the right hon. Gentleman, so far as I can gather its purport, would be for the purpose of relieving the House from a state of things which would be intolerable. . . . . As the only way of getting the House out of the difficulty, I take upon myself the responsibility of allowing the Motion to be made, [328] 37, 38

Supply—Report—Mr. Speaker said, that at that stage the hon. Member could not move the reduction of the Vote for the Colonial Office. The Question before the House was that they agree with the Committee in their Resolution to pass the Vote. The hon. Member could say "No" to that proposition, [329] 219

Moved, "That the Lords' Amendments be considered on Tuesday."—Mr. Speaker: The hon. and learned Member cannot divide against this merely formal Business. It is formal, and routine of the House; and I do not think it comes within the Rules of Opposed Business, or can be opposed, [329] 1353, 1354

cont.

House—Mr. Speaker said, the hon. Member (Mr. James Stuart) had exhausted his right to speak, and could only speak by indulgence, [330] 1370

Speaking a Second Time, [329] 1854; [330] 440; [331] 1463; [332] 617, 1016

Reference to a Previous Debate—Mr. Dillon asked whether the hon. and gallant Gentleman (Colonel Saunderson) was in Order in referring to a particular debate which had taken place a short time ago?—Mr. Speaker: The hon. and gallant Gentleman is referring to a debate on the first reading of this same Bill, [331] 564

Liability of Trustees Bill—Consideration—Adjourned Debate—Speaking a Second Time. Mr. Speaker: The hon. and learned Gentleman (Sir Edward Clarke), having already spoken, can only speak by the indulgence of the House, [331] 1488, 1489

Mr. Conybeare rose to address the House—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman has already spoken, I believe. Mr. Conybeare; I moved the Adjournment last night.—Mr. Speaker: The Adjournment having been agreed to, the hon. Gentleman is within his right, [331] 1489

Limitation of Observations—Supply—Report—The Constabulary Vote—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member for Northampton will be perfectly in Order if he confines his remarks to the conduct of the Royal Irish Constabulary, [331] 1879, 1880

Mr. Dillon having referred to the Report of the Committee of 1858, which sat to inquire into the condition of things on the Olphert Estate, Donegal.—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member is now travelling wide of the Constabulary Vote in entering into the evidence given before this Committee so many years ago. . . . . I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but this has nothing to do with the Constabulary Vote, [331] 1900, 1901

Latitude of Debate—Mr. S. Smith was proceeding to call attention to the disturbed state of feeling and the grievances existing in Wales

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Of course, the limits of discussion are very wide on these occasions; but I do not know how the hon. Member proposes to connect this subject with the Bill before the House. The Appropriation Bill is subject to the same Rules which affect other Bills, and the point to be discussed must be somewhat relevant to the Bill. Sir Wilfrid Lawson asked whether it was competent for anyone to move any sort of Amendment to the Second Reading of the Appropriation Bill?—Mr. Speaker said, it had not been customary; but since 1870 Amendments had repeatedly been moved, [332] 903, 904

Relevancy and Irrelevancy

The hon. and gallant Member is now entering into a subject which would more properly come in upon the Navy rather than the Army Estimates, [323] 234, 640

I must remind the hon. Member that his observations are entirely irrelevant to the subject of the introduction of an English

[cont.

Bill. He is quite out of Order, upon the introduction of a Bill relating to England and Wales, to make such constant reference to Ireland, [323] 1701

Relevancy—The Financial Statement—Any inquiry or discussion would only be relevant which referred to the subject of the Resolution which was passed last night in dealing with the Wine Duties. The noble Lord (Lord R. Churchill), therefore, upon that Resolution, would have to confine his remarks to the Wine Duties, [324] 401

Irrelevance—I must point out to the hon. and learned Gentleman that he is treating the broad Question before the House in a very special manner, [325] 831

Irrelevance—The hon. Gentleman is not talking in any sensible manner relatively to the subject before the House. I must warn the hon. Gentleman. . . . . I must ask the hon. Gentleman to discontinue his speech, [328] 150

Irrelevance and Repetition—Mr. Speaker: I must call the attention of the House to the great abuse involved in the course the hon. Member is pursuing. The hon. Gentleman is not only talking at extreme length—I do not complain of that, which it is competent for him to do—but he is repeating arguments which he made use of on the last occasion, and repeating himself to-day on a subject which is purely a financial one, [329] 1734

Mr. Philipps asked, whether the Government would, at an early date, bring forward some measure dealing with the question of mineral royalties?—Mr. Speaker: Order! Such a subject does not come within the scope of a discussion on the Appropriation Bill, [332] 929

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill—Mr. Cunninghame Graham was proceeding to call attention to the distress existing in certain parts of the country — Mr. Speaker: I do not think a general disquisition on the state of the poor in any district would be relevant to the Appropriation Bill. If the hon. Gentleman could allege that there had been any neglect of duty on any Minister's part with reference to any particular class of workmen he would be in Order; but it would not be relevant to discuss generally the condition of the poor, or to allude to further legislation, [332] 1014

Un-Parliamentary Language

Mr. E. Harrington: The right hon. Gentleman the Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Balfour) was fond of imputing mendacity to his opponents; but that evening the right hon. Gentleman had himself furnished a good example of the flippant mendacity which usually characterized his statements.—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! That remark is very improper, and altogether un-Parliamentary. I must ask the hon. Member to withdraw it, [322] 186, 187

Sir Walter Barttelot: Whereas hon. Members elow the Gangway opposite merely showed respect for the Queen in that House, while everything they did outside showed the itter feeling entertained against the Sovereign and against the Government.—Mr. Speaker: I think the remark of the hon. and gallant Member ought not to pass without notice — they are un-Parliamentary. Sir W. Barttelot said, that as his expression was considered too strong he would withdraw it at once, [322] 523

Lord George Hamilton: I have to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the circumstance that an hon. Member has made use of the words "Tory skunks." I wish to ask you, Sir, whether such language is regular?—Mr. Speaker: Such language is highly improper and un-Parliamentary, and if I knew the name of the hon. Member who used it, I would bring it before the House, [322] 746

Order—Irregular Language—Political meetings of a legal and loyal character, and political meetings of an illegal and disloyal character—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The Question, in the language in which it is put, is out of Order, and deals with a matter of opinion, [323] 1431

Mr. W. Redmond: Why do you not let us answer the Chief Secretary's speech?—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Mr. Redmond: You are afraid to be answered.—Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Member persists in these unseemly interruptions, I shall have to take strong measures. Mr. J. F. X. O'Brien: You are cowards. — Mr. Speaker: Order, order! [324] 457

Mr. T. P. O'Connor: Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman would pardon him if he said that he did not consider him the highest moral authority, although, in another sense, an authority on the doctrine of equivocation.—Mr. Speaker: I wish to point out to the hon. Member that his last expression exceeds the courtesies of debate, and should therefore be withdrawn, [325] 924

Lord Randolph Churchill wished to draw Mr. Speaker's attention to the fact that the hon. Member (Mr. Conybeare) had said that what the right hon. Gentleman had stated was absolutely false. He desired to know whether that language was Parliamentary?—Mr. Speaker: If the hon. Member used that expression, I hope he will withdraw it, [328] 1423

Mr. Conybeare: Without fear of the application of the closure, which he had no hesitation in saying was, under the circumstances, simply a public scandal —— Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The remark which the hon. Member has just now made must be withdrawn. Mr. Conybeare: I withdraw the remark. But the hon. Member, speaking in a low voice, was misunderstood, and Mr. Speaker "named" him to the House. After explanation, Mr. Speaker: It is quite sufficient if the hon. Member said he did withdraw. I did not so understand him, but I accept his word most unreservedly, [328] 1899, 1900

Un-Parliamentary Expressions—Mr. Sexton asked whether the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant was entitled to say in this House that, on a comparison of veracity between my hon. Friend who sits below me and officials in Ireland, he believes the officials in Ireland, and flouts the testimony of my hon. Friend?—Mr. Speaker: I think that the hon. Member misunderstood the observation of the right hon. Gentleman. The right hon. Gentleman has appealed to me as to what the right hon. Gentleman said; and I heard the right hon. Gentleman say that he had no desire to pit the veracity of the hon. Member against the veracity of the officials, [329] 745

Mr. J. Chamberlain complained that the hon. Member for the Scotland Division of Liverpool (Mr. T. P. O'Connor) had made use of an expression of an offensive character, which he addressed to him in the House of Commons. He had called him "Judas Chamberlain." It being denied and affirmed that this expression had been used.—Mr. Speaker said: I therefore ask the hon. Member for the Scotland Division of Liverpool whether he did use the expression? Mr. T. P. O'Connor: Yes, Sir; I used the expression. Afterwards—Mr. T. P. O'Connor: I do not wish to be a party to, nor do I think I should be justified, in prolonging this discussion; and, whatever may be my feelings on the subject, I admit I should not have used the expression in this House, and I now wish to withdraw it, [329] 884, 885

Mr. T. M. Healy: I object. You give us no quarter, and we will give you none.—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I must ask the hon. and learned Gentleman to observe Parliamentary manners, [329] 1191

Mr. Speaker: I must call on both hon. Members (Dr. Tanner and Mr. Brookfield) to maintain a courteous bearing towards each other, and I do hope the House will not consider it necessary to pursue this matter further, [329] 1362, 1363

Sir John Colomb: I wish to ask whether it is in Order, when one Member puts a Question, for another hon. Member to ask whether he is not ashamed of himself for doing so?—Mr. Speaker: It is clearly out of Order. The expression did not reach me, or I should have taken notice of it, but it is an improper and un-Parliamentary expression, [330] 113

Irregular Expressions—Mr. Byron Reed said, that many hon. Members were interested in the speedy passage of the Land Purchase (Ireland) Bill, in order to proceed with other Business that had been long delayed by the factious obstruction of hon. Members opposite. — Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member must not make use of the phrase "factious obstruction," [331] 457

The Judges—Mr. T. W. Russell: Is it in Order for a Member of this House to state regarding one of the Judges of the Supreme Courts in Ireland, that he has prostituted the seat of justice to assist the Government to carry out their policy?—Mr. Speaker said, the term "prostitution of the seat of justice" was clearly an improper and un-Parliamentary expression, and he asked the hon. Member (Dr. Kenny) to withdraw it, [331] 536

Disorderly Conduct — Un - Parliamentary Language — Mr. Cunninghame Graham ordered to Withdraw—Mr. Cunninghame Graham: I asked a definite Question whether the right hon. Gentleman would afford facilities for the discussion of a Motion of one of his own supporters? If he does not do so, I characterize that Motion as a dishonourable trick to avoid discussion.—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. Member is conducting himself in a most unusual and un-Parliamentary manner in making use of language of that kind. I must request him to withdraw the expression he has made use of.—Mr. Cunninghame Graham: I never withdraw. I simply said what I meant.—Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. Member to withdraw the expression "dishonourable trick," which is a strictly improper and un-Parliamentary expression. Mr. Cunninghame Graham: I wish to acquit myself of any intentional discourtesy to you; but I am compelled again to characterize the action taken with regard to this Motion as a dishonourable trick.—Mr. Speaker: I must again ask the hon. Member to withdraw so improper and un-Parliamentary an expression.—Mr. Cunninghame Graham: I refuse, Sir, to withdraw. Mr. Speaker: Then I must ask the hon. Member to withdraw from the House, [331] 773

Mr. Conybeare said, that if the hon. Member (Mr. Brooke Robinson) had been aware that his hon. Friend's absence was caused by the serious illness of Mr. Cunninghame Graham, he presumed the hon. Member would not have had the brutality to attack his absent friend.—Mr. Speaker: The word "brutality," used as the hon. Member used it, should not be employed in debate, and I must ask the hon. Member to withdraw it. Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. Member (Mr. Conybeare) to control himself within the ordinary limits of Parliamentary decorum, [331] 1388, 1389

Attendance and Seats of Members—Offensive Language—Mr. Bartley asked, whether it is in accordance with the Rules of the House for the hon. Member for Mid Cork (Dr. Tanner), who sits on the other side of the House, to come to this side and make remarks which are most offensive to us, and, in consequence, lead to great altercation and considerable noise in this direction?—Mr. Speaker: I cannot prevent the hon. Member for Mid Cork sitting in whatever part of the House he chooses to sit in. At the same time I may point out to the House that there are traditions in this House, and I must leave it to the good taste and courtesy of hon. Members as to the place they will sit in. Of course, if any collision arise, I should know whom I am to make responsible for it. I did not gather that the expressions made use of by the hon. Member for Mid Cork were of an un-Parliamentary character. If they were, it would be quite competent for the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Bartley) to bring them to the notice of the Chair, and I should certainly be bound to deal with them, [331] 1483, 1484

Dr. Tanner said, he had to call attention to a personal matter. Just now he left a broken baton near the Chief Secretary, that the right hon. Gentleman might see how it had been broken. Since then a private Member refused to restore the broken baton, which was his (Dr. Tanner's) own property.—Mr. Speaker: The House is almost as tired as I am of these wretched personal disputes that circulate around the hon. Member for Mid Cork. At the same time, if any hon. Member has taken the baton referred to, I hope he will at once restore it, [331] 1904-5

Orders of the Day

A Correction allowed, [325] 438

Motions and Questions

Motions—Mr. Speaker suggests an alteration in the form of a Resolution for an Address in reference to the Metropolitan Board of Works, [322] 676

Latitude and Limitation of Questions, [322] 1231; [324] 723

That appears to be a Question that does not arise from the Question on the Paper, nor is it possible to answer that Question without Notice, [323] 357

The only observation which I think it my duty to make is that there is a practice growing up of making counter-statements upon a Question being put, which it is impossible, of course, to deal with, and which practically assumes the form of a new Question given without Notice, but which should be the subject of a separate Notice on the Paper, [323] 374

Order—The only question was whether the Second Reading of the Bill should be set down for 2 o'clock on Friday, and it was not competent to enter into any other question, [323] 884

Notice—The Questions of both hon. Members were without Notice, and were certainly of a very argumentative character. He understood the Notices were given only a few minutes ago, [323] 1436

Sir Charles Lewis begged to say that the Question had been put down incorrectly on the Notice Paper; the most material parts had been left out; and he wished now to supplement it.—Mr. Speaker informed the hon. Baronet that the portions referred to had been purposely omitted, [323] 1613

There is no difference in the practice, nor is there any distinction made between Questions from one side of the House or the other, [323] 1628

Combination of Discussion—Mr. Ritchie suggested that it would be convenient that both Bills should be discussed on the Motion for the Second Reading of the Local Government Bill—Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances of the case, and considering the close connection between the Bills, I do not think I ought to raise any objection to a general discussion taking place upon the two measures, [324] 1065

Irregularity of Questions—The latter part of the Question was struck out by myself, as being irregular, [324] 1475, 1735

Alteration of Questions—Mr. Clancy: In putting this Question, I desire to point out that the summary of this declaration of the prisoner, as given in the Question, is not mine, and that I gave the original statement.—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! There was a reason why it was summarized. It was that the Question of the hon. Member extended over two pages of foolscap, and it was almost impossible to put down a Question of that length; and as fair a summary as was thought possible was substituted, [324] 1738

cont.

Complicated Questions—Mr. Speaker: It may be for the convenience of the House that the hon. Gentleman's two propositions should be put together; but if any hon. Gentleman objects to their being taken together, they will be put separately, [324] 1823

Irregular Questions—That Question is out of Order in itself, and ought to have been given Notice of, and put upon the Paper. Then it would have been submitted to me. . . . That Question also is very improper. If it had been handed in, I should have disallowed its being put upon the Paper, [325] 28

It is within the competence of a Minister to refuse to answer a Question, [325] 319

Alteration of Question—Mr. Buchanan complained that the Question did not appear on the Paper in the form in which he handed it in.—Mr. Speaker said, the Question had been altered under a known Rule of the House, for the purpose of avoiding controversy as to what had previously passed in the House, [325] 338

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! That seems to be the subject of a new Question. Mr. M'Cartan: Arising out of this, Sir.—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! That seems to be the subject of a new Question, of which due Notice must be given, [325] 441

The hon. Gentleman is now making a counter-statement. If he wishes for further information he had better put a Notice on the Paper in the usual way. The hon. Gentleman is making a counter-statement to which it is not possible for a Minister to reply, [325] 593

It is a Rule of the House that a mere opinion of a Member on a particular subject is not the proper subject for a Question, [326] 1538

Mr. Gladstone having put a Question to the Chief Secretary, with whose answer he was dissatisfied, said, he would to-morrow put a Question, which he recited.—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I am sorry to interrupt the right hon. Gentleman; but there is a Rule of the House against giving Notice in this way, [327] 96

I must call the attention of the House to the practice, which is a growing one, after the Questions have been twice gone over, of Members reviving Questions which have been answered some time ago, and raising a series of further Questions upon them. I think that practice is causing serious inconvenience to the House, [327] 115

Notice—The right hon. Gentleman has just stated that he is not in a position to give an answer to-day, but that he will give it to-morrow. If the hon. Gentleman is asking a Question now which is not on the Paper he should give Notice of it, [327] 817

cont.

If the hon. and learned Gentleman wishes to put a Question to elucidate a point, he is entitled to do so; but he cannot introduce any matter of argument, [327] 988

It is an irregular Question to ask the Government whether they agree with the observations of the learned Judge, [328] 426

Mr. Chance asked whether it was in Order to answer a series of other Questions when a reply to one only was asked for?—Mr. Speaker: The Question is too trivial for me to answer, [329] 528

If I recollect right, the term used by the hon. Gentleman was invidious—I am speaking from memory—and the words were whether the system commonly called jury packing was habitually enforced in the county? I thought that expression ought not to appear on the Paper, and I think so now, [329] 533

I must say that it seems to me that the practice of putting supplemental Questions is being greatly abused to-day, [329] 534

Irregular Questions—Questions to the Chair—Mr. Conybeare asked the Speaker, as a point of procedure, whether on Friday, July 20, the hon. Member for Camborne was suspended from the service of the House; and, if so, what was the effect of the vote on the right of the hon. Member to enter the precincts of the House, Galleries, or Libraries?—Mr. Speaker: It is very unusual for an hon. Member to put a Question to the Chair in this manner. If the hon. Member will communicate privately with me I will endeavour to give him all the information in my power, [330] 462

Mr. Nolan wished to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department a further Question of which he had given Notice—namely, what had been done in the case of the men who had hooted and pelted the ex-Prime Minister at Dover last December?—Mr. Speaker: That Question was struck off the Paper by my direction, [330] 641

Notice—Mr. Conybeare asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, with reference to the murders in the East End of London, whether he did not think it was time to replace Sir Charles Warren by some other officer who would investigate those crimes?—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. Gentleman must give Notice of that Question in the usual way. Mr. Conybeare: I now give Notice of it.—Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member must give Notice in writing at the Table in the usual way, [330] 774

Mr. Conybeare asked whether it was true that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had asked the Scotch Members to support the Excise Duties (Local Purposes) Bill on the understanding that it should not extend to Scotland; and whether he intended to carry his Bill by such bribery?—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! That Question is not on the Paper, [330] 1888

[cont.

Mr. Speaker: Order! A series of Questions like this amounts to a debate, [331] 23

Irregular Questions—Mr. Bradlaugh, referring to a Question on the Paper in the name of the hon. Member for Oldham (Mr. J. M. Maclean), asked Mr. Speaker whether the allegation in Paragraph 2 that an Englishman named Hume was the author of "seditious pamphlets," and the reference in Paragraph 3 to "revolutionary speeches of delegates to a Congress which aims at destroying the security of English rule in India," were not irregular as containing debatable matter?—Mr. Speaker said, the expressions were undoubtedly irregular, and appeared on the Paper through inadvertence. He had sent for the hon. Member who was to put the Question to point out to him the irregularities, [331] 1018

SELECT COMMITTEES

Sunday Closing Act (Ireland)—Sir Wilfrid Lawson asked whether it was not the rule, when one name was nominated for a Select Committee, that the remarks should be made upon that particular name?—Mr. Speaker said, it would be more regular for the hon. Gentleman to object to any particular name—The Chief Secretary for Ireland said, that, perhaps, on this particular Motion, he ought to say a few words with respect to the general constitution of the Committee.—Mr. Speaker thought the right hon. Gentleman would not be in Order. They had now arrived at a particular name, and the discussion must be confined to the qualifications of that Gentleman to serve upon the Committee, [323] 1704, 1705, 1708, 1709

The Motion that the Select Committee on Emigration and Immigration (Foreigners) do consist of "Nineteen" Members, having been agreed to—— Mr. Speaker intimated that Notice must be given of the two additional names of Members proposed to be added to the Committee, [323] 1797

Aire and Calder Navigation Bill—Order for Second Reading read—Mr. Austin said, he had placed a Notice on the Paper to move that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee—Mr. Speaker said, the Motion of which the hon. Member had given Notice must be moved after the Bill had been read a second time, [328] 16

Bann Drainage Bill—Mr. Sexton said, he gave Notice last night, by speech and writing, that on the next occasion of this Bill coming before the House, he would move that in consequence of the exclusion of Irish Representatives from the debate on the Second Reading the House decline to proceed further with the measure. That Notice had not appeared on the Paper, and the question he had to ask was, in what form could the objection of the Irish Members be raised, if not pertinent to the Motion for reference to a Select Committee? He would ask in what manner that debate could be raised?—Mr. Speaker: On the Report stage of the Bill.—Mr. Sexton: After it comes back from Committee?—Mr. Speaker: After it comes back from Committee. Mr.

Tomlinson: The Bill goes to a Select Committee; will it not be considered in Committee by the House?—Mr. Speaker: It must come before the House, [329] 157, 158

STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Abraham asked if there was any proposition for adding Representatives of the working classes to the Committee in relation to the Bill?—Mr. Speaker said, that was a matter for the Committee of Selection, [327] 227

MISCELLANEOUS

Personal Explanation—Mr. Howell rose to make a personal explanation with regard to the use of the term "battleworthiness" of ships of war which the noble Lord (Lord George Hamilton) had challenged. He wished to refer to the report of the Question 2987, which was, "Do you consider yourself responsible for the battleworthiness of the ship?"—Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. Member is rather exceeding the limits of a personal explanation. The good faith of the hon. Member has not been attacked, [330] 1667

Waste and Vacant Lands
Moved, "That, in the opinion of this House, ownership of land in the United Kingdom should carry with it the duty of cultivation or utilization, and that in all cases where land capable of cultivation or utilization with profit, and not devoted to some purpose of public utility or enjoyment, is held in a vacant, waste, or uncultivated state, the local authorities ought to have the power to compulsorily acquire such land by payment to the owner of a sum representing the capital agricultural value of such lands, in order that such local authorities may, in their discretion, let the said lands to tenant cultivators, with such conditions as to term of tenancy, rent, reclamation, drainage, utilization, and cultivation respectively as shall afford reasonable encouragement, opportunities, facilities, and security for the due utilization, cultivation, and development of the said lands" (Mr. Bradlaugh) May 1, [325] 1081
Amendt. to leave out from "That," add "whilst recognizing the fact that considerable portions of the lands of the United Kingdom, including those in a so-called vacant, waste, or uncultivated state, cannot be profitably cultivated owing to Agricultural and Industrial Depression, and are, therefore, unable to support their increasing populations, this House is of opinion that conferring powers of compulsory purchase on Local Authorities is not an effectual or desirable remedy for this state of things" (Mr. Seton-Karr); Question proposed, "That the words, &c.;" [House counted out]
